times of the day when public transport is not available. The difficulty is that, nowadays, few cyclists obey the highway code. When I was a cyclist I had that code drummed into me, but now cyclists overtake me on the inside, ride in my blind spot and jump the lights. Perhaps a minority of cyclists behave in such a dangerous manner, but we must do something to ensure that cyclists understand that they, too, are responsible for road safety.

Mr. Jack Aspinwall (Wansdyke): Does my hon. Friend agree that the sidetracking that he mentioned would be helpful for cyclists in traffic?

Mr. Carrington: My hon. Friend is right, but that brings me back to the problem of parking. My hon. Friend will know that cycle tracks in London go down the side of roads and, more often than not, someone parks in those tracks. The cyclist must then go out into the road, which defeats the purpose.

The solution to the problem of double-parking is simple —we should have more control on parking. I welcome the Government's initiative to give parking control to local authorities. We should have a self-financing service operated by traffic wardens who can identify bad and illegal parking. Double-parking is dangerous and is therefore a police matter, but traffic wardens would be able to report that and summon assistance from the right authorities.

Another problem caused by cars is that when people leave a party late at night—even a well-run one—they may slam their car doors. That noise is as anti-social as any other behaviour.

I recognise that I have taken up a considerable amount of time and I hope that hon. Members will forgive me for doing so. This is an extremely important matter of concern to my constituents and I am grateful for the opportunity to discuss it.

We must address one of the fundamental problems of anti-social behaviour. I do not believe that it is confined to a particular stratum of society; it is not related to poverty or wealth, but crosses the spectrum. The difficulties that people encounter in their housing and the problems that are caused to neighbours are frequently misunderstood and related to the poverty of the individual. In other words, it is suggested that someone living in poor circumstances because he does not have a lot of money is more likely to be anti-social than someone living in relative comfort.

Mr. Allen McKay: The hon. Gentleman's argument is extremely good. Is he aware of the problem with neighbours that is being encountered in Belgravia? One morning a man got up to find that his Rolls-Royce had been stripped of paint; it will cost him £25,000 to put it right. The next morning he found that his car was covered with bolt holes. He has accused his neighbour, who has denied liability.

Mr. Carrington: That problem illustrates exactly what I am trying to say. Disputes between people are more often to do with human nature than with human conditions.

One difficulty is that sociologists frequently look at the problem and claim that if only we did this or that it would be solved. That is not true. The only thing that will solve human nature is divine intervention and we have been a bit short of that recently. We can all hope that human nature will change, but we should not be too optimistic about it.

It is frequently suggested that poverty is the cause of anti-social behaviour. I believe that that does a considerable injustice to people who do not have a great deal of money. It is also suggested, sometimes by the Labour party—I do not want to introduce an unsuitable party-political tone, because the problem of anti-social behaviour is a cross-party one—that if one introduced a minimum wage into the pay bargaining structure it would solve many of the problems associated with anti-social behaviour. I note from the expression on the face of my hon. Friend the Minister that he is extremely pleased that that subject has been raised. I can understand why.

It is suggested that a minimum wage would alleviate poverty, but it would do no such thing. It would exacerbate it, as has been demonstrated by studies of that policy. A minimum wage would create more unemployment as it would throw people out of work. Many of our trade unionists have illustrated ably how that minimum wage would create pressure for the restoration of differentials in pay bargaining. That means that all wages would go up so that the minimum wage would cease to be of benefit to the lower paid. Its introduction would mean that everyone's wages were pushed up, which would make inflation far worse. We all know that high inflation hits the least well-off in our society hardest. A minimum wage would make life worse for the poorest people.

Mr. Randall: What is the hon. Gentleman's formula for helping to alleviate poverty in Britain?

Mr. Carrington: The hon. Gentleman has been here many years and he has listened as the Government have explained endlessly how we shall alleviate poverty.

Only a few ways of alleviating poverty work. The principal one is to achieve a healthy, low-inflation economy which grows solidly and consistently. We have achieved that in the past 10 years at a faster rate than have our European neighbours. There will always be people who, sometimes through their own fault, but often through circumstances, end up being out of work and having to say to the state, "I cannot support myself. I need assistance." We must ensure that the level of assistance increases at as rapid a rate as the economy can afford. That, too, has been achieved under Conservative rule. The level of income and social security support, through housing benefit and so on, has kept pace with, and sometimes gone beyond, the rate of inflation. So the least well-off in the community are doing very well indeed.

The same is true of wages. The average household has seen its real rate of disposable income increase by about 3 per cent. a year since the Conservatives came to power. Those are the ways to alleviate poverty. To try to do it by manipulating the social structure of the fabric of society not only does not work but causes worse problems.

Mr. Randall: What the hon. Gentleman suggests as the answer to poverty has not worked. The Conservatives have been in power for over a decade and the OECD figures show that in the poverty stakes, Britain is at the bottom of the league in Europe. The gap between the rich and poor has widened. Either the hon. Gentleman accepts the level of poverty that exists in this country or he does not understand how the Conservatives have been operating during the past decade.

Mr. Carrington: The hon. Gentleman becomes confused on this subject, which is not unusual among Labour Members. I accept that the gap between the rich and poor has been getting wider, but the poor have become much richer and some at the top have got richer as well. In other words, the whole of society has prospered. The implication of the hon. Gentleman's intervention is that the size of the economic cake is static and that, as a result of the rich getting richer, the poorer have had money taken from them. That is not true; the poor have got richer as well, because everybody has benefited from the growth in society.

Statistics can prove almost anything, and the hon. Gentleman quotes statistics to suit his case. The degree of poverty in society depends on where one draws the poverty line. As society gets richer and as, rightly, we give more resources to people who cannot look after themselves—as we pour money into helping people who were abandoned by the Labour party before 1979—the poor get richer. Poverty is defined by the level at which people get assistance from the state. As the threshold for receiving assistance goes down and as the amounts of assistance that people get go up, larger numbers of people are helped.

That is the right way to proceed. Rather than increase the degree of poverty, it alleviates it, because we recognise poverty where previously it was ignored. We bring people into receiving help. Family credit is a good example of that. If the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) knows people in his constituency who have not taken up family credit, he should urge them to do so, because the Government have been extremely generous to those who are unable to look after themselves. That is one of the great strengths of our economy.

The measure of poverty and proposals, for example, for a minimum wage, will not solve the problem that we are debating this morning. It must be tackled in other ways, often by local authorities arbitrating between neighbours, recognising that different lifestyles must be considered when housing is allocated and responding faster to enable measures to be taken to identify the problem and then tackle it, whether that is simply by talking to both sides in a neighbours' dispute or by obtaining an eviction notice, and so on.

Mr. Randall: I have great respect for the way in which the hon. Gentleman is putting his case, but there is a terrific flaw in what he and the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) have been saying. The hon. Gentleman is advocating that we do nothing to prevent problems from arising. His argument has been entirely about how we deal with the problem after it has arisen. My hon. Friends and I argue that there has been a deterioration in the social fabric which has contributed to the trouble and that the most cost-effective way of dealing with it is to improve the social fabric in crucial areas so that people do not have recourse to anti-social and criminal behaviour.

Mr. Carrington: I had hoped that the hon. Gentleman would not take that line, because it is not a useful way of considering the problem. It is not simply a problem of society, although it must be addressed ahead of time. I spoke of housing allocation policy and the like. Apparently the hon. Gentleman missed that part of my speech. It is not good enough simply to blame the social fabric of our society, which today is more homogeneous than at any time in the past. We now have greater respect for each other. [Interruption.] More complaints are now being made by the public about anti-social behaviour because people generally complain more today about matters that previous generations tolerated happily. The same applies to crime statistics. The amount of crime has increased because more crime is reported.

Mr. Randall: Really!

Mr. Carrington: If the hon. Gentleman does not believe that, let him examine the correlation between the number of policemen and the amount of crime. There is a greater willingness today to report crime. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South, I hope that the Secretaries of State for the various Government Departments involved will consider what measures can be introduced to help solve the problems that we are discussing. Although those measures may not solve them completely, they may provide a path to a solution.

11.57 am

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): It is a pleasure to follow the speech of the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) and I agreed with many of the points he made in his interesting and constructive speech. Long ago, I served as a member of the old Fulham borough council and later I was a member of the borough of Hammersmith and Fulham. Having grown up in the area, I am well aware of the problems that the hon. Gentleman rightly brought to the attention of the House.

I listened with interest to the speech of the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo). He will be aware that during the week, certain words were added to his motion. When I first visited the Vote Office and asked whether the terms of the motion had been published, I received a copy and decided to take part in the debate, and my speech was prepared at that stage much in accordance with the speech that the hon. Gentleman made.

I proposed to talk about the playing of loud music. On that and similar issues, I agree with the comments of the hon. Members for Nottingham, South and for Fulham. It is a real problem to which there are no readily available answers. One approaches the police, they become involved, the music is turned down for a while, the police go away, the music is played at high volume again and when one telephones the police again they reply, "We are stretched to the limit and we cannot pay another visit."

The hon. Member for Fulham suggested that people should contact the environmental service officers. He may not be aware that on many occasions people who telephone are connected to an answering device, so the party, or whatever the disturbance may be, has ended before those officers are able to get involved.

When I saw the additions to the motion I decided to change the content of my speech. In the coming months Labour Members can expect such changes on an increasing scale, including the usual attacks against Labour councillors. The motion names the councils under attack, but I shall speak about another council that is not named—Wandsworth council.

Mr. Norris: It is a good council.

Mr. Cox: I wonder whether the hon. Gentleman will say that once he has heard my speech. If so, I am more than willing to make arrangements for him to come to my constituency to witness several ongoing problems there. I wonder whether he will then say that it is a good council.

We know much about the London borough of Wandsworth and the fact that it is a no-poll-tax borough. However, we all know the old saying, "You get owt for nowt", which certainly applies to Wandsworth.

Mr. Norris: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Cox: I shall give way later. I have only just started my speech.

Many residents, irrespective of their family and social backgrounds, now say that Wandsworth council——

Mr. Norris: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Cox: No, the hon. Gentleman must learn to contain himself a little.

Residents in the borough now say that Wandsworth council is behaving anti-socially. Another old saying is that the chickens come home to roost. They are now coming home to roost in Wandsworth because the Tory group there, which has a massive majority, is split. This week's edition of a long-established, highly respected newspaper, the Wandsworth Borough News, contains a lengthy article on that subject. It names the groups that are now splitting from the official leadership of Wandsworth council. Last night's Evening Standard also reported the split. At the annual general meeting in May, several very experienced and highly respected councillors were sacked. They were chairs——

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. Eric Forth): Chairs?

Mr. Cox: They were chairmen and chairwomen of important committees in Wandsworth. The Minister laughs; we know his style. I wonder whether he will laugh at the point that I am about to make.

Mr. Forth: Probably.

Mr. Cox: That is the kind of comment that we expect from the Minister. If Labour councillors were being attacked, he would shout "Hear, hear". However, when he hears Conservative councils being attacked he regards it as a big joke.

Those former senior chairmen and chairwomen were sacked by the leader of Wandsworth council because they opposed the ongoing cuts in council services. They are quoted as saying that the leader of Wandsworth council, Sir Paul Beresford—he was knighted by the right hon. Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher) for his services—misled them and has imposed excessive and unnecessary cuts on the council. Such action has been detrimental to many of the services in Wandsworth.

Mr. Norris: I wanted to agree with the hon. Gentleman's earlier remark about getting "owt for nowt". I have the misfortune to live in Lambeth, which is littered with huge sacks of fetid, rotting rubbish. When I go into Wandsworth I see that I should prefer to live there because there is neither rubbish nor poll tax. Therefore it seems that "owt for nowt" is an extremely attractive option.

Mr. Cox: As one would expect, the hon. Gentleman does not mention that there are not many services in Wandsworth either. He would not need such services because he is lucky enough to be able to pay for them. As the hon. Member for Fulham said, if one is fortunate enough to have a good job, a good income or independent means, one does not look to the council to provide services. So there is another side to the argument.

I am prepared to accept that some people are delighted that they pay no poll tax. We know that in the City there are people who would be delighted to pay no tax at all. Services in Wandsworth are being increasingly run down, cut back or completely stopped. For example, this week's Balham and Tooting Guardian —a freebie newspaper that circulates throughout Wandsworth—says:

"CAB office is to close. Balham Citizens' Advice Bureau has been forced to scale down services and will close its doors in September as a result of a council-imposed grant freeze. Wandsworth council froze the CAB's grant of £513,000 for its four borough offices in March".

The article then says:

"Last year, the Balham CAB handled more than 10,000 inquiries and will now have to find other ways to serve the area."

That is just one example of what has happened as a result of the deliberate policy of "no poll tax". Alongside such cutbacks in provision for local people, we have seen the complete stoppage of grants to Pensioners Link. To his credit, the hon. Member for Nottingham, South referred to old-age pensioners who are experiencing enormous problems. Throughout the country, large numbers of pensioners look to pensioners' organisations such as Pensioners Links. They have little money and rely on Government or council grants, which have now been stopped in Wandsworth.

Wandsworth Disabled Group, which no hon. Member would suggest should stand on its own two feet and raise its own money, has had its money stopped. As the hon. Member for Fulham said, we live in a multiracial society that exists in great harmony. Like many theatre groups, the Tara arts theatre group in my constituency was struggling. Its funding was stopped. What happened? It had to close. The list goes on and on.

I agree that housing is of crucial importance. Hundreds —I repeat, hundreds—of council properties in Wandsworth are boarded up and waiting to be sold, yet every day my postbag is filled with letters from people who have grown up in the borough but cannot find anywhere to live. People wanting somewhere to live will come to my advice service tonight. All of us who hold weekend advice services experience that. Those people are wasting their time, even if they are on the council house waiting list because they will not get much hope or help from Wandsworth council. By contrast, a person with money or one who can get a mortgage has no housing problem whatever. Such a person does not even have to live in the borough of Wandsworth to buy a council property.

The hon. Member for Nottingham, South described the reactions of people suffering housing problems. We all know that they say, "Who do I turn to? I have lived in the area all my life. I do not have the resources to buy my own property or get a mortgage. I certainly do not have the kind of money that would allow me to go to an estate agent and rent property. I look to the council." All around them they see properties that are boarded up and they ask why they cannot be offered one. The simple answer is that Wandsworth council's priority is to get rid of council housing as quickly as possible. That is most certainly anti-social behaviour. We all know what happens.

Youngsters say, "To hell with this. I won't stand it any more", and leave home. That creates stress and friction within the family. Youngsters end up sleeping rough, and sadly, some wind up in trouble.

I am involved with Wandsworth council in a major issue—the closure of an elderly people's home called Milton Close in Earlsfield. It has 30 residents. I read in the Wandsworth Borough News that the home was possibly to be closed. As every Member would—the hon. Member for Nottingham, South outlined our responsibilities—I got in touch with the residents. I told them that I had read about the possible closure but had not been informed by the council that it might happen and asked whether there had been consultation. Back came the letters—I have them in my office if any hon. Member wants to see them—saying, "There has been no consultation with us. We do not know what is going on. We are extremely worried. We have lived in the area for a long time. If the home is closed will we still be allowed to live here?" They were worried. I wrote to the director of social services, outlining the sort of feedback that I had received from the residents and asking what sort of consultation there had been with them. Last week I got a letter from him saying that now that the social services committee had decided to close the home, the council would enter into negotiations with the residents to see what they would like to do. That is anti-social behaviour. All of us would argue that to achieve good industrial relations—that broadens the issue slightly—good human relations and good relations with the council, everyone concerned must be involved early on. Wandsworth council most certainly has not done that. Its behaviour is certainly anti-social.

Schools in Wandsworth are facing amalgamation. Two of the schools so threatened are in my constituency and the other is on the other side of the road in the constituency of the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis). Several hundred youngsters who attend those schools live in my constituency. I have been inundated with letters from local parents who are completely opposed to what is being threatened for the schools to which they chose to send their youngsters. On Wednesday evening I attended a public meeting to hear the council's proposals on the amalgamation of Swaffield and Allfarthing road schools. Several hundred parents attended the meeting. Both schools are popular. Everyone who spoke was completely opposed to the proposals presented by the chairman of the education committee.

This week the Balham and Tooting Guardian, which is a good paper with wide coverage, carries a letter from a lady who lives in the Battersea constituency. The headline is:

"What will become of the children?"

She is just one of the residents, of whom, as the hon. Member for Nottingham, South rightly pointed out, we should take note. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman meant that to apply to all levels of government because he certainly referred to local authorities. The letter states:

"To merge Allfarthing and Swaffield Schools would be a disaster for children."

With reference to herself and her husband, she continues:

"We were lucky to obtain a place at Swaffield School and can see our child making good progress as a result of the school's professionalism . . . The plans to close two well respected schools make a farce of the Tory party's policy of increased parental choice. Who knows what standard of education these proposals will bring or how many children's education will be blighted by this plan or even how many children will be unable to obtain a place in the proposed merged school?"

I am prepared to be generous to Wandsworth council. These are supposed to be genuine consultations. At Milton Close there were no consultations. The overwhelming number of parents now understand that Wandsworth council is stripping the assets of its schools.

Mr. Carrington: The hon. Gentleman and I represent similar parts of London. The profiles of Wandsworth and of Hammersmith and Fulham are demographically similar. He will know that the process of amalgamation of schools which he describes as being so resisted in Wandsworth is exactly the same as that in Labour-controlled Hammersmith and Fulham where it is being opposed in exactly the same way by parents, often with my support.

The hon. Gentleman cannot claim that Wandsworth is asset-stripping the schools unless he also claims that Hammersmith and Fulham council is asset-stripping its schools—which is nonsense. I hope that we can now get away from this party-political badinage and back to a more sensible debate about what is going on in our society.

Mr. Cox: That is a valid point, but the hon. Gentleman spoils it when he suggests that we get away from this sort of political attack. The hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris), who has an outer-London constituency, thrives on this sort of political fight. Given the opportunity, he would be indulging in it today. That is what this Chamber is all about.

The big difference between Wandsworth and Hammersmith and Fulham is that the latter council does not have the asset-stripping track record of Wandsworth council. That is what worries the parents of Wandsworth so much—they have seen what else Wandsworth council has done and they made their fears clearly known at Wednesday's meeting to the chairman of the education committee, when they told him that they did not believe him. They have written to me to say that they are Conservative voters but that they do not believe what Wandsworth council tells them.

The motion also refers to unemployment, so it is worth looking at Wandsworth's unemployment. It has the ninth highest unemployment among London's 32 boroughs. The official figures published on 9 May showed that 12,879 people were unemployed in the borough of Wandsworth. In response to a question from me, the Employment Service in a letter dated 17 June stated that in my constituency, in the supposedly wonderful borough of Wandsworth, 4,788 people were out of work and there were only 104 vacancies in the local job centre.

Earlier there was quite an exchange between my hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) and the hon. Member for Fulham about a minimum wage. I shall not get involved in that argument as time is flying by, but, whether we talk in terms of a minimum wage or, as the Secretary of State for Employment does, about how many hours a week people should work, the crucial problem to which the Government are unwilling to face up concerns people who cannot even get a job. What are the Government doing about them? What I have said about Wandsworth's unemployment can be said of any of the London boroughs —some have even higher unemployment.

I accept much of the wording of the motion tabled by the hon. Member for Nottingham, South. So does the Labour party. Some Labour authorities have taken actions that we certainly do not support: indeed, we condemn them. I make no bones about that. But we should not draw attention to Liverpool, Lambeth and Hackney, as the motion does, without showing the other side of the local government coin—Tory-run authorities.

To their credit, there are already councillors in Wandsworth who have had enough of the behaviour of the leader of the Conservative group and his policies of cuts, cuts and more cuts. No longer are they prepared to be part of all that because they have seen what it does to services. I agree with the hon. Member for Nottingham, South that councillors seek to serve their communities—how right he was. These councillors' political views are different from mine—we belong to different parties—but it is to their credit that at long last they have told the leader of the council that he is destroying the fabric of society for the vast majority of people who live in the borough. I wish them well, not because I want to cause problems within the gorup—that has nothing to do with me—but because I want good services to be provided by councillors and councils for the people who live in their areas. The record of Wandsworth council, with its "no poll tax", has been an utter disgrace for the people who have lived in Wandsworth for many years.

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): It is a great pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox). He and I share an interest in greyhound racing. We also share an interest in the problems of urban areas, although he would not expect me to agree with his remarks about Wandsworth.

I apologise to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) for not being here at the start of his speech this morning. I got out of bed at the right time to be here for 9.30, but on my journey I found that the Angel station was closed—I do not know why. Applying a little lateral thinking, I got on a bus and went down to King's Cross. There I was on the platform waiting for a Victoria line train when suddenly a voice announced that the station was being closed and everyone on the platform had to leave. Just at that moment, a train arrived but its doors did not open and it went on its way with a lot of frustrated people inside trying to get out and a lot of frustrated people on the platform trying to get in.

I mention this only to give a pat on the back to the station managers at King's Cross: there was no panic, all the automatic gates were open and staff were on hand to usher people out. I just hope and pray that nothing terrible was going on at King's Cross this morning. It may be that someone dropped a piece of litter on to the track which was then set on fire by a spark. Such an action is in itself anti-social.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South on the wording of his motion. As soon as I saw it I let out a cry of joy because it would allow me to ride all my favourite hobby horses again—starting with the numbering of premises. Before you, Madam Deputy Speaker, rule me out of order, I contend that it is very anti-social of those who own shops and offices not to number them.

If one wants to visit a particular shop in, for example, Victoria street or Holborn—or any other street that seems to stretch for miles, particularly on a hot day—one may identify from the telephone directory that it is at No. 351, and set out to find that address. One does not know at which end of the street it is to be found, or whether it is in the middle of the street. One may find No. 15, but then one has to discover which way the numbers run, and walk another 100 yds before arriving at No. 20. That is even more unhelpful, because one does not know whether the premises are numbered consecutively, or whether odd numbers run all the way down one side of the street and even numbers down the other and whether in a clockwise direction or an anti-clockwise direction.

My next point concerns burglar alarms—a subject in which I have long taken an interest. People who are in the habit of turning on their burglar alarms when they go away for the weekend are, in effect, expecting all their neighbours to listen out for the alarm if it goes off. It is their neighbours who will be driven crazy by the noise of the burglar alarm if it goes off on Friday night and continues sounding for the whole weekend. Here I refer not only to alarms on residential property but shops and other commercial premises. Burglar alarms are supposed to ring for only 20 minutes before they automatically cut off, but in all too many cases, that does not happen. On 9 May 1989, when I sought to introduce my Burglar Alarms (Control) Bill, I stated:

> "I have discussed the matter with the Metropolitan police and the House will be as horrified as I was to learn that according to their reckoning about 98·4 per cent. of times when they are called to deal with burglar alarms it is a false alarm."—[Official Report, 9 May 1989; Vol. 152, c. 724.]

No wonder no one takes any interest these days when a burglar alarm goes off—everyone automatically assumes that it is a false alarm. The manufacturers of burglar alarms over the years have a great deal to answer for.

I move on to the internal combustion engine——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd) rose——

Mr. Summerson: I will certainly relate my remarks to the motion, Madam Deputy Speaker. The internal combustion engine, by its very nature is extremely noisy.

Mr. Randall: Does the hon. Gentleman have one?

Mr. Summerson: I will come to that. It need not be noisy, according to the way the vehicle is driven. People like the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) and myself take a responsible attitude when driving our motor cars—I in my 22-year-old MG, and the hon. Gentleman in his Rolls-Royce. We set off from traffic lights calmly and gently, so as not to waste fuel or make a noise, but many people think it fun to roar down quiet residential streets as fast as they can, making a terrible racket. It may well be fun for them to upset and disturb others, but it is not fun for those whom they disturb and those who suffer the resulting pollution.

It is very anti-social to allow one's car or other vehicle excessively to pollute the atmosphere. People ought to maintain their vehicles properly, to ensure that their engines give out as little pollution as possible. The day will surely come, albeit in some decades' time, when the people in our cities will look back with amazement and wonder how we could ever have permitted the internal combustion engine to be used in cities, in view of the noise and pollution caused by its use. The pollution attacks buildings and the fumes emitted from the exhaust systems of vehicles that are powered by the internal combustion engine are extremely bad for our health.

To move on—it will be obvious that I am hopping from one subject to another without any real connection between them—it is surely also anti-social to waste water. After all, water is one of our most precious natural resources. That is the kind of phrase that politicians love to trot out because it sounds so good. In fact, it means that we are short of water. More and more people are using more and more of it. There is little connection in the minds of those living in urban areas between the water that comes out of the tap and the source of that water. There are many who do not realise that rivers are drying up because of excessive extraction.

Mr. Randall: I am fascinated by the hon. Gentleman's argument. There are many who are extremely concerned, especially in Kent, that we have had a great deal of rain and yet we still do not have adequate water supplies. It seems that we need to build more reservoirs. The problem is not that we use too much water but that we do not save enough of it. So much of it goes straight into the sea. We should invest in more reservoirs to ensure that we have adequate water supplies.

Mr. Summerson: We already have massive natural reservoirs in the form of aquifers, but we cannot continue pumping aquifers at a rate which extracts more water than can be replenished. If the hon. Gentleman told some of the people of Kent, "We want to cover large parts of your county with reservoirs" he would receive a pretty dusty response. The answer is to conserve water. People should realise what a precious resource it is and use it accordingly.

Turning to dogs, I am a long-term supporter of a national dog registration scheme. I know that I am at odds with the Government on this, but I believe that such a scheme is needed. Those who own dogs which upset the neighbours because of their mess and noise would be less inclined to be responsible for such nuisances if they knew that their names appeared on a register and that they were indissolubly linked with the ownership of such a dog. I am a great dog lover and I would love to keep a dog, but as I live in London I do not think that it would be fair on the dog. I realise, however, that many people find great value in the companionship provided by a dog. I believe also that most people want to see the introduction of a national dog registration scheme and all the benefits that would flow from it.

Much has been said today about noisy neighbours, and especially about the mix of people living in certain areas. Leucha road in my constituency has long been inhabited by elderly people, and that is how those people want to keep it. Recently, however, the council decided to move young people into the road, and I have received many complaints from the traditional residents as a result. They complain about the noise, the internal combustion engine, and the fact that some of those young people turn up at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning on motor bikes, revving the engines and shouting. Those young people obviously enjoy noisy music, often late at night, but it disturbs the elderly people.

When I complained to the council, I received a pompous and stuffy reply saying that the council did not discriminate. That is a truly astounding argument. The council should have consulted the elderly people in Leucha road and asked what they thought about young people with entirely different interests and lifestyles being moved into their area.

I wish next to discuss buildings and their structure and fabric. My hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) spoke about thin partitions and about two-storey houses being converted into separate flats. That can be a real problem because those houses were not originally designed and built to be occupied as two separate units.

Mr. Carrington: It is not a major point, but I should mention that until 1925 or 1930 the demography of London was such that many of the houses that we fondly imagine were in single occupation were, in fact, intentionally in multi-occupation from the time they were built.

Mr. Summerson: That may be true, but people's current expectations are rather higher. If they buy a converted flat and then find that they are constantly disturbed by the everyday activities of their neighbours, there is something wrong. Perhaps that could be solved by strengthening the building regulations to ensure that when a house is converted into a number of self-contained units, the sound-proofing on a horizontal plane between the units is more stringent, which would make the noise transmission between the units much less.

Until now, I have assiduously avoided party politics, but I now intend to bring them into my speech—so Opposition Members can switch off if they want. Because the London borough of Waltham Forest made little effort to collect the community charge last year, it now has a shortfall, so it is imposing a £50·29 surcharge on my constituents in this financial year. There is nothing especially new about a shortfall—there were shortfalls with the rating system, although not so great—but what sticks in my throat and in the throats of my constituents is the fact that the leader of the council and four other Labour councillors made it quite clear that they did not intend to pay the community charge—what an example to set for the rest of the people in that borough. Those elected councillors represent the borough. People look up to them because they run the affairs of the borough, yet they announced their intention to break the law and not to pay the community charge. Many people in the London borough of Waltham Forest must have decided that if their leaders were defying the law, they could do the same, so it is hardly surprising that there was a considerable shortfall on collection of the community charge in the last financial year. Many people have written to me complaining bitterly because they are being expected to pay for those who did not pay last year.

Mr. Alan Meale (Mansfield): How many constituents wrote to the hon. Gentleman saying that they thought that the community charge was unfair?

Mr. Summerson: Most of my constituents agreed entirely with the principle of the community charge. Wherever I went in my constituency, people told me that they agreed entirely with the idea that everyone should contribute something towards the cost of local authority services, but they did not agree with the disgraceful level of £438 at which it was set by the Labour council. In the council elections last year, my party made it clear that we could run the borough on the basis of a community charge set £75 lower. It was left to the Government to rescue the people of the London borough of Waltham Forest, but now the council has imposed this disgraceful surcharge of £50·29.

Mr. Meale: We are discussing anti-social behaviour. What part of the council budget would the hon. Gentleman cut, and what effect does he think that that would have on anti-social behaviour in the Walthamstow area?

Mr. Summerson: The hon. Gentleman has given me a marvellous opportunity, for which I am grateful.

Mr. Carrington: What an invitation.

Mr. Summerson: Indeed. I could stand here for the next three hours telling the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) what I would do. First, I would cut the women's unit. The leader of that unit is paid a salary equivalent to that of a Member of Parliament, for which my constituents have to pay, although they get no benefit from it at all. Since the council took office in 1986, it has taken on 1,000 extra bureaucrats. When my constituents complain to me about the high level of the poll tax, I point that fact out to them and ask them whether they think that they are getting any extra benefit from those 1,000 extra bureaucrats. The answer is no. It is just fat, and they do no good.

I commend sections 89 to 91 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which were introduced to ensure that local authorities live up to their responsibility to keep the roads in their areas clean and well swept. Many local authorities, particularly Labour ones, do not attach a great deal of importance to keeping the streets clean. The heading of section 91 is:

"Summary proceedings by persons aggrieved by litter."

It ensures that people who want to do something about the fact that their local authority is not keeping the streets clean can take some action and get something done about it.

I wish to move on swiftly to the subject of housing action trusts and tower blocks. I have a particular—I was going to say "peculiar", but perhaps I had better stick to particular—hatred and loathing of tower blocks. They are the most horrible things. Which of the architects who designed them or who came up with the concept of tower blocks, talking a lot of rubbish about streets in the sky and cities in the air, has ever actually lived in one of those monstrosities? The sooner all tower blocks are pulled down, the better—I am sure that tower blocks breed unemployment, hopelessness, despair and anti-social behaviour.

There is a possibility that a housing action trust will be created in the London borough of Waltham Forest. If the tenants agree to it, it will remove the three worst tower blocks on the worst estate in my constituency. I hope that the tenants will vote to set up a housing action trust and that it will result in those tower blocks being removed and the tenants living in more traditional housing—by which I mean proper, human, humane housing—and no longer stuck miles up in the air away from their friends and amid the breakdown of the social fabric.

Mr. Meale: Like Jeffrey Archer?

Mr. Summerson: The hon. Gentleman anticipates me. I was about to say that, of course, there are tower blocks in which people are happy to live. One has only to look at the Barbican to see that some people can be happy living in tower blocks, but there is all the difference in the world between a tower block in the Barbican and a tower block on the Boundary road estate in my constituency.

Many of the problems that people bring to me are due to yet another failure by the local authority. If it did its job properly, there would be many fewer complaints from my constituents and everyone would be a great deal happier. That is why I support the second part of the motion, which deplores the conduct of Labour local authorities. I deplore the conduct in far too many areas of the Labour-controlled London borough of Waltham Forest. I hope that the measures that the Government have introduced, especially the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and housing action trusts, will make a start on solving some of the problems and that the amount of anti-social behaviour will fall, and rapidly.

Mr. Stuart Randall (Kingston upon Hull, West): I begin by congratulating the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) on doing so well in the ballot and introducing to the House a motion on anti-social behaviour. However, I must say that the motion has changed in the past 24 hours. We expected to debate noise, problems in tower blocks and other more specific matters, but the motion before us is rather loony. It does no credit to the Conservative party or even to the hon. Gentleman. We have had an interesting debate, but the motion clearly demonstrates that the Conservative party is in a state of utter panic and is sinking without trace as we move towards the general election.

The opening comments of the hon. Member for Nottingham, South were interesting, especially his notion of compulsorily removing people who behave anti-socially to licensed alternative council property and, if they persist with their anti-social behaviour, of throwing them on to streets. The hon. Gentleman's use of the word "tough" showed that he believes that they should be dealt with firmly.

Labour believes that many of the people who, unfortunately, could be caught by such a policy need care and help. The hon. Gentleman said that mentally ill people would not be so treated, but it would have been unfair not to have said that. However, his definitions were not sharp enough. We sense that the Conservative party would support people who need help and who are a top priority being thrown on to the streets. That is reminiscent of what happened after the 1979 election, when Ministers advocated the short, sharp shock and when Conservative Members spoke of hanging and flogging in debates on capital punishment.

I am not happy about the first line of the motion because it is frivolous. Parts of the motion are sound, but the end is nonsense. The first line mentions anti-social behaviour. In essence, that is behaviour contrary to that which is generally recognised as being required so that we can live together in a civilised way. In the past decade, the Government's policies have been based on the notion that there is no such thing as living together. The consequences of that ideology is that the Conservative party is regarded as uncaring. It supports the ultra-rich at the expense of poor people and it encourages greed, selfishness, and the notion of "I'm all right, Jack".

A good example of that was the yuppie phase of the mid to late 1980s, which encouraged greed, materialism and the showing-off of big cars. Interestingly, that coincided with the increase in the number of beggars on our streets. That conservatism has created a society which is economically and socially unfair. The rich have unquestionably become richer and the poor have become poorer. The traditional British ideas of fair play and decency which permeated the Conservative party have been driven away by the new breed of Tories. As a consequence, Britain is less civilised.

A good example of that is the way in which the Government have allowed directors of newly privatised industries such as gas, electricity, British Telecom and water to grab massive pay rises. The Conservative party does not seem to understand the resentment that that is causing, especially among people who are unemployed or on the verge of unemployment. There is a rottenness—a stench—emanating from the Government. No wonder the British people are turning their backs on them. The Opposition believe that the social fabric of Britain has been severely damaged by the Conservatives which in turn has contributed to the anti-social behaviour referred to in the motion. That is the difference between the two sides of the House.

Under the Conservatives, Britain has become more divided and more polarised; Labour party policy is just the opposite. We believe that society is about living together in a civilised way, removing the inequalities of opportunity, developing talent and creating a genuinely freer society. Labour party members are socialists and proud of it. The word "socialism" comes from the Latin word "socius" and means being a companion, ally and partner, and acting together. Those are wonderful qualities which must be the basis of civilised behaviour. That is diametrically opposed to what the Conservative Government have practised during the past 12 years. What are the consequences? There has certainly been a growth of anti-social behaviour. Hon. Members who represent about 60,000 people know that that is true, because they are all in touch with their constituencies.

Under the Conservatives, we have had the highest crime figures ever recorded in British history. It is worrying that many of those crimes are of the nastier type involving horrific violence and sexual abuse. Why do people resort to crime? I know that I am interpreting statistics, but the Opposition believe that unemployment contributes to drug-taking, which can turn into crime. There have been various papers on and statistical analyses of the subject. Some of our research shows that the inter-relationships between unemployment and crime in the past decade are complex. I do not believe that sufficient work has been done to determine the precise reason. Many factors impinge on one another. We believe that the social fabric of Britain would be better if the massively increased unemployment levels were reduced.

Mr. Forth: I detect that the hon. Gentleman might be backing away from his earlier stance. If he is suggesting that there is a causal link between unemployment and crime, does he accept that that is an insult to most unemployed people to which he would not want to be a party? If that is so, will he explain why, regrettably, crime in this country, as in many others, has risen in the past decade, wheras employment has gone up and down? Therefore, how can there be any relationship between them?

Mr. Randall: I thought that I had qualified my suggestion. I followed the Minister's logic, which I have heard before. It has been used many times in the House. I was saying that the behavioural problems relating to this country's social fabric were more complex than the simplistic bits of logic given by the Minister. I take the Minister's point, but the Opposition believe that unemployment can cause crime. I gave the specific example of drug-taking. Some pretty good research has shown that there is a relationship between drug-taking, crime and anti-social behaviour. The problem is more complicated than it appears.

It would be far better if our country did not have such a high level of unemployment, but we are in yet another recession under the Government. Perhaps the Minister can tell us when he expects unemployment to come down to even 1·5 million people. I am sure that he will mention that issue.

Another important part of the social fabric is the need for decent housing for all. My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) made an eloquent speech on that subject and the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) also mentioned it. However, that housing must be provided at rents that people can afford. In certain parts of London, we believe that the Conservative party has carried out a ruthless programme of social engineering to ensure that people on lower incomes, who are likely to be Labour supporters, are driven out of the areas in which they have traditionally lived. Such places have become yuppie-ised. My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting said that Walthamstow council—[Interruption.]—operates a policy to get rid of council housing. That is social engineering. I note that the hon. Member for Nottingham, South is grinning with glee thinking, "My goodness. My majority is going to go up even further." Such social engineering demonstrates the anti-social behaviour that has been committed by the Government and local authorities that connive with them.

Mr. Carrington: The reason why my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) and I laughed was the hon. Gentleman's Freudian slip when he referred to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) criticising the borough of Walthamstow. We entirely agree with that and we admire the hon. Gentleman's conversion to our cause.

Mr. Randall: The motion was changed so late that I did not start to prepare my speech until 10 o'clock last night. That is the reason for my mistake. I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman should intervene to correct the record. It is the policy of Wandsworth council to get rid of council housing. That anti-social behaviour and engineering of constituencies is uncivilised and it puts party politics before the well-being of people.

Mr. Barry Porter: I am interested in the issue of yuppification. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman could reveal to the nation where he lives.

Mr. Randall: It is clear where I live. We have been told for security reasons not to give our address, but I live in a place called Trinity court, off Fish street in Hull. The hon. Gentleman will find me listed in the Hull telephone directory.

One consequence of pressing local authorities so that they are unable to provide housing and accommodation at a decent rent is a growing resentment, despair and fury at local authority behaviour.

Another factor that has caused much resentment is the way in which our education system has been damaged. It does not take a PhD to appreciate that if one does not provide a broad education for personal development there is a greater probability of anti-social behaviour. The more youngsters are given an opportunity for education, the better for society. The Labour party has traditionally regarded education as perhaps the most important factor in creating individual freedom. Strength and power emanate from education and we believe that if we are to have a genuinely free and fair society, the education system must be no less than excellent and must be available to all.

As Conservative Members have attacked me in housing terms, perhaps I should point out that all my children have gone through state education. I hope that I do not sound pompous when I say that yesterday my son-in-law got his honours degree. So Simon Lomax is now a doctor and my daughter is a doctor. We have two doctors in the family and I feel very healthy. I hope that I shall be forgiven for showing off my pride in that way.

I feel passionately about education. It is vital to give youngsters the chance of a good education. When I used to visit state schools with my children I sometimes felt almost a sense of resentment at the way in which the walls of corridors had not been painted for a decade, and where there were leaking roofs and outside toilets. To act in that way is to treat children almost with contempt. Youngsters must feel pride in their schools, or they can turn to vandalism, which is a manifestation of anti-social behaviour. Youngsters tend to say, "Why should I bother to do my bit if the authorities, including the local authorities, fail to do theirs?" Local authorities have been hampered by Government policy. We must set young people a good example.

One of the most tragic and perhaps the most visible failures of the Conservatives in protecting the social fabric of Britain has been in the growth of poverty and homelessness. I feel ashamed that we should have tens of thousands of people, many of them young, living on the streets of our cities. We should hang our heads in shame at society having degenerated in that way in the past decade.

Many of those people are there through no fault of their own. On my way to my constituency I walk through Euston and King's Cross stations—I also frequently go through Waterloo station—and talk to some of the youngsters. They welcome my interest. They are glad that somebody is taking an interest in them. Often they are a decent bunch of kids who are there through no fault of their own. I resent our country being damaged in that way and such a state of affairs being allowed to exist. Nobody seems to care about them. Everybody seems to be rushing along attending to their own business. The compassion that used to exist in Britain, of which we were proud, seems to have disappeared.

Many of those desperate and forgotten people have recourse to drugs. A few weeks ago I visited an organisation called DART—the drugs and alcohol resource and treatment team—in my constituency. The leaders of the group told me that some of the youngsters who had received treatment there had been taking drugs that cost £800 a week to finance. It is remarkable that many of those young people have been spending £800 a week on drugs for a considerable time, but it is less surprising that their drug habits are financed by crime and anti-social behaviour. Amazingly, they never seem to be caught.

The Government's taxation and social policies are largely responsible for creating poverty and homelessness, which have such devastating consequences on British society. The Government must at least accept some of the responsibility for the ensuing anti-social behaviour.

I referred earlier to the record levels of crime under this Conservative Administration. In absolute terms and as a percentage of the population, Britain puts more people in prison than any other European country. The cost of running our prison service is about £1 billion a year. People are simply pushed into prison where they are often given no treatment, therapy or employment training opportunities. They simply come out some time later and the level of recidivism is very high. If those people are not a threat to public safety, one wonders why we are spending £1 billion a year for criminals to come out and commit the same crimes. Some are even worse after spending time in prison.

The Labour party believes that that is a manifestation of the Government's policies during the past decade. They allow crimes to take place and then bang people in prison. In some parts of the country the judiciary put people into regimes that can be of value, but the system is so patchy that that does not always happen. By contrast, the Labour party advocates that the emphasis must be on crime prevention rather than dealing with crime after it has happened. I realise that the Government are trying to change in that way.

Mr. Barry Porter: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Randall: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman after my next point.

The Government spend only some £250,000 on crime prevention, which is not adequate. Clearly, they have not put it high on the priority list. They have simply produced a glossy brochure, which is why the statistics are so bad.

Mr. Porter: I speak not as a member of the Conservative party but as a former solicitor in the criminal courts. It may surprise the hon. Gentleman to know that I agree with what he says, but I do not know the answer.

It takes a great deal of personal effort to get into prison. The run-of-the-mill chap who starts off in a juvenile court can expect to have seven or eight convictions before he is taken away from society. The hon. Gentleman is right that the rate of recidivism is high, so putting people into prison does not seem to cure the problem. I want to know what we should do, because, although past Labour and Conservative Governments have tried community service orders, short sharp shocks and supervision orders, the rate of crime continues to rise. The hon. Gentleman was perfectly entitled to say that the problems occur because of the Conservative Government, but he is entirely wrong. If he is correct, why is crime rising in countries with Social Democratic Governments and Governments of no particular party? It has to do not with party politics but with society's attitude. I agree with the hon. Gentleman that putting people into prison for relatively minor offences is not correct and we should reconsider it.

Mr. Randall: I am interested to hear what the hon. Gentleman has to say. He can speak with great authority having practised in that area of the law. I accept that the Government have changed, but during the past decade we were throwing people into prison for fine defaults. People were thrown into prison for trivial offences, which is why the numbers are so great.

The new emphasis must be on crime prevention. We must encourage all the agencies involved in crime-related matters, particularly the local authorities that have been cut out so far, social services departments, voluntary organisations, neighbourhood watch and the police. All must work together positively to prevent crime. Some measures are simple. We can relocate a bus stop from down the road to just outside a pub so that those who have had a drop too much get straight on to a bus and go home. If the bus stop is elsewhere, they might wander round the streets and kick in windows. That may sound trivial, but it is important. If we put some lighting in what we in Hull call tenfoots, or back alleyways, we can prevent women from being attacked. Those little measures are important. Local authorities have much to offer in that regard, but the Government have prevented them from participating. That is a negative approach and a reason why crime prevention has not been as effective as it should have been.

Mr. Summerson: The hon. Gentleman is right about lighting. As it happens, I am wearing my British parliamentary lighting group tie. He is right to emphasise the importance of crime prevention and he mentioned neighbourhood watch and the role of police and local authorities. Will he, therefore, explain to the House why many Labour-controlled local authorities have obstructed the establishment of neighbourhood watch schemes?

Mr. Randall: The hon. Gentleman's case could have stood up in the early 1980s, but not now. Even in the last Parliament, it was said that Labour was anti-police, yet interestingly at the last Association of Chief Police Officers conference there was no clapping following Lord Waddington's speech, but almost a standing ovation for my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). That is just one, perhaps small, manifestation of the way in which the Labour party is held in such high esteem by the police these days. We are moving in the right direction.

There is terrific scope for making remarkable reductions in anti-social and criminal behaviour, but it must come about through co-operation such as I have described. The role of local authorities is crucial.

The Conservatives give the impression of being anti-local government. They have centralised powers and prevented local authorities from making the decisions and providing the services that they wish.

Self-discipline within families is a factor which influences levels of anti-social behaviour, but the key factor is to improve the social fabric of British society which has been so disastrously damaged by nearly 12 years of Conservative rule. The new Labour Government will create a more cohesive society which will be economically and socially just. We do not want people living in cardboard boxes on the streets. That symbolises the ethos of Conservatism. We want to eliminate poverty and to improve job prospects and prosperity. We want decent education and health care for all. We want all families to have decent housing and to be relieved of horrific and record levels of crime. It is these aspects which will improve the social fabric of Britain and which we believe are the prerequisites for reducing anti-social behaviour.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. Eric Forth): This has been a fascinating debate, as these Friday occasions often are. I, too, pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) for selecting this imaginative motion.

In a sense, this has been a debate with problems but no solutions. That is perhaps not surprising, given the subject matter. I select as evidence of that examples from two Opposition Members who have been here throughout the day. The right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams), speaking about many different sorts of cases, said that he did not know what to do about them. He also pointed out that my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South had not offered many solutions to the problems that he identified.

The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) plumbed the depths of superficiality when he said, in a startling phrase which we shall all remember for a long time, that it would be better to have a country with no unemployment. As a Minister in the Department of Employment I may say that that came as an inspiration to me; it is a phrase which will be burnt into my memory for a long time to come. If the hon. Gentleman is prepared to go beyond that profound analysis and offer us a solution one of these days, I shall be the first to listen to him.

The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West also seemed obsessed by what he called yuppies. I do not know whether he thought that young poeple who are upwardly mobile are a good or a bad thing. I have always thought that young people seeking to better themselves are a rather good thing. If the Labour party is now against young people bettering themselves, the sooner we hear more about that the better——

Mr. Randall: Of course we are not against yuppies. We are not against anyone. We believe in creating a more cohesive society. We are complaining about the social engineering that has been effected by Conservative councils in conjunction with a Conservative Government so as to ensure that certain parliamentary seats, especially in the south of England, are safe. We resent that because it hurts people. The Government are putting parliamentary politics before the people of London.

Mr. Forth: This is getting richer and richer. We are moving from a statesmanlike debate to the rough and tumble of party exchanges—in which I am always a reluctant participant. I shall, however, allow myself to be drawn in on just this one occasion. The hon. Gentleman talks about social engineering. He is a member of a party which devised the comprehensive system of education which has almost destroyed our education system over the past two decades, solely in the cause of wrongheaded social engineering. So I take the hon. Gentleman's accusation ill from him. The right hon. Member for

[Mr. Forth]

Swansea, West will remember, too, that it was the Labour party, under Lord Callaghan, which gerrymandered parliamentary boundaries. So accusations from Opposition Members about social engineering are a disgrace, and I refute them.

Mr. Alan Williams: The hon. Gentleman was stretching the point about comprehensive education a bit far. Edward Boyle was the relevant Secretary of State and Labour councils certainly supported the policy, but so did a great many Conservative councils. If the Conservatives had thought the policy wrong, they were for a great many years in a position to stop it happening.

Mr. Forth: I do not want to get drawn into a debate on education, since there are many other points to cover today. It was the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West who mentioned social engineering and I was simply trying to answer his point.

On the whole, this has been a serious and thoughtful debate about the real problems that all Members of Parliament encounter every time we meet our constituents on social occasions or in our advice bureaux.

My hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South graphically described situations that we all recognise, in relation to the problems that arise from noise, nuisance, harassment, and other difficulties with neighbours. They are among the most intractable problems that confront Members of Parliament and local authority officers. It is widely acknowledged that local authorities have a key role in trying to ensure that tenants can enjoy their homes in peace.

Perhaps it was not sufficiently acknowledged by today's contributions that owner-occupiers and private and public tenants and their families are covered by laws designed to allow them to enjoy their homes in peace. One of the most important is the Protection from Eviction Act 1977, which we amended in the Housing Act 1988, and which was designed to protect residential occupiers from being harassed. It is often assumed that harassment is an act perpetrated principally by the rogue private landlord against his tenant, but it is a more wide-ranging offence.

If a landlord or his agent, or someone who may or may not be connected with him, indulges in any behaviour that is designed to undermine the occupier's security, he could be guilty of harassment. It is a criminal offence to harass a residential occupier and one which attracts fines of up to £2,000 and up to six months' imprisonment. We amended the Act only three years ago to enable the courts to award to a private tenant who is illegally evicted damages based on the profit made by the landlord from the illegal eviction. Those new provisions have already proved very successful. The courts have awarded damages of £34,000 and £46,000 in recent cases.

That Act and the changes that we made to it emphasise the basic rights of the occupier to undisturbed occupation, whatever the precise nature of his tenure. My right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department of the Environment have on many occasions made clear their commitment to that right, and to the need for landlords to gain possession of their property through the courts if they want to repossess it.

Many of today's contributions dwelt on the question of noise—including those of my hon. Friends the Members for Nottingham, South, for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) and for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson). Noise is a major cause of irritation between neighbours, and it is one to which the construction of many modern properties contributes. It affects residents of blocks of flats, terraced houses, semi-detached properties, and even those who live in open, rural areas as much as those in densely populated urban areas.

The technology for creating noise has developed much faster than the technology for preventing it—if that exists. Many modern machines and entertainment systems, for example, generate noise at levels that were inconceivable and intolerable not that long ago.

My hon. Friend's motion refers to environmental health legislation. The Environmental Protection Act 1990 consolidated and updated the law on statutory nuisances, including noise, and clarified the duty of local authorities to investigate complaints, to such an extent that if a council is satisfied that a statutory nuisance exists, it must serve an abatement notice on the person responsible or on the owner or occupier of the premises, and can enforce that notice through the magistrates court.

Alternatively, any individual who is aggrieved by the existence of a statutory nuisance may complain directly to the magistrates court, provided that he also notifies the person against whom he is bringing proceedings. The court can make a nuisance order if it is satisfied that a statutory nuisance exists.

The streamlined procedures introduced by the 1990 Act make it easier for councils and individual occupiers to take action, but that was not the end of the story. The noise review working party was established, and the report that it published last October contained a wide range of recommendations. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has already accepted some of them and to the extent that it was possible for him to act on them in the framework of the Environmental Protection Bill as it went through the House, he did so. The other recommendations are being seriously considered and the Department has already published an initial response.

The review covered all types of noise, many of which have not been referred to today, and perhaps the most important in relation to the motion was the section on neighbourhood noise. That source of noise has always generated the most complaints and the volume of complaints, if I might use that expression, has trebled over the past 10 years. One of the sources of noise to attract most attention in recent months—it has been mentioned several times during the debate—is private parties. Indeed, it was noisy parties that were partly responsible for our setting up the rather appropriately if not quaintly named noise review working party. It was just about possible with the sort of noisy parties that took place a decade ago to console oneself while it was going on that the party must come to an end eventually. However, the noise levels that are now being experienced tend to be in a different league from those of 10 years ago, and some people often feel that they are losing their sleep and their sanity.

Neighbours can be furious that local authority officers and the police can arrive at the scene of a party and apparently be powerless to stop it in its tracks. The officers may face serveral obstacles. For example, making a noise is not in itself a criminal offence. Perhaps the party-giver cannot be identified, and it may be that the noise-maker cannot be arrested. The noise review report devotes a considerable amount of space to this issue, and includes recommendations about new offences that are being considered seriously and urgently.

I have said that noise made by neighbours generates the most complaints. In some ways, it is the most intractable problem, because individual freedoms are involved as well as straightforward nuisance. It must be sensible for neighbours to try to sort out problems among themselves before involving the local authority and the law. With that in mind, the Department of the Environment has financed the recently launched first pilot neighbourhood noise awareness scheme in the Forest Hill area of Lewisham. The idea is that a local group of residents, of all tenures, come together and prepare their own leaflet suggesting ways in which they can restrict the impact of noisy activities.

The leaflet produced at Forest Hill contains advice on noise levels, noise and annoyance, illegal activities, guidance on what to do if disturbed by noise and a community code recommending how noise can be reduced, with a list of do's and don't's. Anyone who is suffering and cannot secure an improvement by a direct approach can drop a note to the local authority and the complaint will be followed up.

The keynote of the scheme is that the initiative lies with the residents, and that attempts are made to nip trouble in the bud. Those are the same themes that I mentioned earlier. Though the Department of the Environment is reviewing possible legislation, I think that we must recognise that the law is not the total answer. There must always be resident involvement and early co-ordinated action. As I think the right hon. Member for Swansea, West said in this and another context, we need not more laws but more common sense in many instances.

A significant problem was brought graphically to the attention of the House by my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South. It was mentioned also by my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham. There are residents who are forced to deal with people who, through no fault of their own, are not able to exercise what I have recently described as common sense. In extreme cases, the lack of common sense in the sense that I use the term can be a form of mental disorder. That condition may be so extreme that the question arises whether the sufferer should be detained in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983. My hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South mentioned a case of this sort in which he has been involved. The operation of the 1983 Act is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and is not the responsibility of the Department that I represent. I shall, however, attempt to give a brief explanation on behalf of my right hon. Friend of the way in which the Act operates.

Broadly speaking, the Act provides that a person may be detained in hospital if he or she is suffering from mental disorder as defined by the Act. "Mental disorder" for the purposes of the Act means mental illness, arrested or incomplete development of mind, psychopathic disorder and any other disorder or disability of mind. "Severe mental impairment" means a state of arrested or incomplete development of mind, which includes severe impairment of intelligence and social function, and is associated with abnormally aggressive or seriously irresponsible conduct. The Act further defines mental impairment and psychopathic disorder.

It must also be necessary that the person should be detained in the interests of his or her own health or safety, or for the protection of others. The mental disorder must be of a nature or degree that makes admission to hospital, as opposed to other possible options, appropriate.

Having said all that, I should add that detention is always a severe restriction of personal liberty. Therefore, the operation of the Act relies on the clinical judgment of doctors and other professional staff, who must satisfy themselves that all the criteria that I have mentioned apply. A person may not be detained simply because he or she is a nuisance. When the Act was introduced, Parliament went to great lengths to ensure that it safeguarded the interests of the patient or his or her family, and that of the community at large. It is, of course, a very difficult matter to ensure in every case the balance of interests that the Act was specifically designed to achieve.

I am assured that, in most instances, the Act appears to be working well, but some difficulties may arise in the interpretation of its provisions and there may of course be genuine differences of opinion in exercising clinical judgment. The Department of Health published a code of practice in May last year, which is intended to help to resolve some of the problems. The code is for the guidance of registered medical practitioners, managers and staff of hospitals and mental nursing homes, and approved social workers, in relation to the admission of patients to hospitals and mental nursing homes under the Act. It is for the guidance of registered medical practitioners and members of other professions in relation to the medical treatment of patients suffering from a mental disorder.

That Act, of course, operates against the background of the wider policy that mentally ill people should be looked after as far as possible in the community. However, it is a prerequisite of this policy that mental illness hospitals should not be closed before alternative, locally-based services are available—and that principle was restated in the community care White Paper published in 1989. The development of local services is aimed primarily not at closing hospitals, but at providing services to meet the diverse needs of the mentally ill. Health authorities' closure plans relate mainly to the traditional mental hospitals—the sort of places that are too old, too large or too remote to form part of a modern service providing care and treatment with the minimum of formality and delay.

Having said that, I add that we recognise that the development of local community services has been patchy. Recently—from 1 April this year—we introduced a specific mental illness grant for local authorities, and we have provided £21 million from central funds in the current year. My right hon. Friend has also introduced the care programme approach, which offers a systematic approach to the care of people referred to the specialised mental illness services.

Tremendous amounts of money and effort are being devoted to helping with the problems of mentally ill people, but only a small proportion of them will or should be subject to detention under the Mental Health Act. That does not mean that the Act needs to be reviewed, but it does mean that there will be cases, such as the one described by my hon. Friend, where the community will be expected to cope in the best way that it can with what I might describe as oddnesses of behaviour. That does not put people above the law. They may engage in behaviour affecting their neighbours, which may occasionally be criminal, and they will be subject to the criminal law like everybody else.

Where cases of assault are involved, prosecutions can be brought under the Public Order Act 1986 and the Offences Against the Person Act 1861. The Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 enable victims to seek compensation. Those whose behaviour is difficult may, if they are local authority tenants, also pose management problems for their landlords.

We must accept that good management practices by the landlords are essential. I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that, in such cases, it is essential that the Government provide the framework—which I believe they have—that local authorities play their role responsibly—which, by and large, they try to do—and that the social services departments act, as they so often do, as the long stop or safety net. However, there may still be—and it may always be the case—individuals who are difficult to deal with under those provisions, and who will simply continue to test the patience of us all, including my hon. Friend.

My hon. Friend the Member for Fulham raised the question of a national minimum wage. That is an important element in the debate, if only because the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West mentioned unemployment levels—although he had to alter tack later in his comments. It is worth exploring the question of a national minimum wage because the Labour party has tried to have both the penny and the bun. It is coming perilously close to its old trick of pretending—as the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) said about another matter, and which I shall rephrase a little to take account of my different origins and accent—"You can't get anything for nothing." The House should clearly understand exactly what is meant by a national minumum wage. The Labour party has suggested that lots and lots of people can get more pay, but that it will not cost anybody anything. All that we need to do is wave a legislative wand, pass a law and, magically, a lot of people will get more pay. Presumably, that is the idea behind a statutory minimum wage.

It is worth having a look at what all that might mean. We have to go to the Labour party's political document, which was rather misleadingly entitled, "Opportunity Britain". In it, the Labour party promised to introduce a national legal minimum wage starting at the level of 50 per cent. of men's median earnings and that, over time, it would increase as a proportion of earnings to a point where no one was paid less than two thirds of the male median hourly rate.

In fairness, I should say that the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair), who speaks for the Opposition on these matters, is now trying to resile from this. In a letter to The Independent yesterday, he said that, as long ago as 12 June, he had made it clear that when Labour says "everyone", that does not mean everyone, because it does not include young trainees, whoever they are—he does not define them. According to the same letter, he did not for the "first time" say that teenagers should not be covered. There is an element of doubt as to just who would be covered. It is no longer "everyone", because some categories are being excluded.

Whether this is the first, second or third time that it is being said does not matter for this purpose. It is up to Labour Members to clarify what they mean. Given the importance of the issue, it is vital that we understand fully what Labour means by a "statutory national minimum wage". Our estimate is that if it is applied at anything like the levels that the Labour party is talking about, even with the initial rate of 50 per cent., it will cost at least 750,000 jobs, and possibly as many as 2 million jobs if we go to the minimum of what is proposed. The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West expressed sincerely his concern about the effects of unemployment on the social fabric, but for his party, in almost the same breath, to subscribe to a policy that may be well intentioned but would have the inevitable effect of raising unemployment by unimaginable levels is grossly irresponsible.

Labour Members will have to face up to this point and answer it. They cannot argue that people should be given a certain level of pay as of right, regardless of productivity, performance or the ability of employers to afford it, and then complain about the undesirable and evil effects of unemployment on society. That is inconsistent, irresponsible and unfair. The sooner that Labour Members come clean on this, the better it will be for all of us.

It is worse than that, because the mechanism of the system that Labour is proposing will give rise to the "chasing of the tail" phenomenon. If a statutory minimum wage level is related to a median and then raised, and then differentials are introduced, which in turn will raise the median further, inevitably the minimum must be raised. With such a process, before we knew where we were, we would be caught in a vicious upward spiral whereby the minimum chased the median and vice versa. We would be locked into a process that inevitably meant rampant inflation and further job losses.

How all of this fits with a party which is allegedly concerned about the levels of unemployment is beyond me. It has not prevented Labour Members from taking part in the debate on the motion of my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South, on anti-social behaviour, and talking glibly about the difficulties of society, and importing unemployment into it. Given their policies, that is an odd way to go about things.

What do the trade union leaders, who are allegedly supporters of the Labour party—perhaps it is the other way round—say about a national minimum wage? Mr. Bill Jordan of the Amalgamated Engineering Union has made it clear that he, on behalf of his members, would demand full restoration of differentials. His union would oppose any "squeeze on differentials". He has said:

"if the price of a national minimum wage is wage restraint for higher paid members, then our answer would be no."

Gavin Laird has said:

"no way are we going to agree to a standstill of craft differentials."

Roger Lyons, the leader of the Manufacturing Science Finance union has said that any idea that the unions could be persuaded to offer wage restraint under a Labour Government is deranged. Eric Hammond, general secretary of the Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union has said:

"we will oppose any restraint on differentials by any government and we will do all in our power"— that power is considerable—

"to increase the reward for skills, qualifications and productivity, not just because it is in the interests of our members, but more importantly, because it is in the interest of our economy and country".

What could be clearer? A series of senior labour leaders have come out and said that whatever any Government sought to do on a national minimum wage, they would step in with their union power and demand a restoration of the differentials that they expect for their skilled workers.

The first result of the proposal for a national minimum wage mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South in the motion would be the prospect of mass unemployment. The second result would be action to support the restoration of differentials. That, in turn, would lead to an increase in pay levels which, in turn, would lead to a further necessity to increase the minimum wage. What policy could be more damaging or irresponsible or have a worse effect on Britain's employment level and economic strength? That is a question which Opposition Members must answer. We are still waiting for an answer.

The next aspect of a national minimum wage was touched on by Opposition Members. The first myth that they propagate is the problem of low pay and that people are increasingly poorly paid in the British economy. It is an absurd analysis. As we all know, throughout the 1980s the general standard of living in Britain has risen. People on all pay levels have enjoyed higher pay, a point which my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham made very well. To suggest that there is a group of disadvantaged people at the bottom of the pile is absurd. The facts simply do not bear that out.

The second myth that is often propounded by Opposition Members is that the widening of the spread of earnings denies the fact that lower-paid people have improved their lot. They have indeed. Since 1979 average male earnings have increased by over 28 per cent. and average female earnings have increased by over 36 per cent. in real terms. That is ahead of any inflation level at any time, whereas in the years up to 1979 the figures were only a fraction of the increases since then. Lower-paid occupations have by no means received the lowest increase since 1979. The average level of pay for those in the bottom 10 per cent. of male earners has increased. The increases have taken place across the board and across the spectrum.

The third myth that must be dealt with is that those on low earnings are a fixed group of people who are condemned for ever to be in low-paid work. That is not so. Many, indeed most, of the low paid and young have only recently entered or returned to the labour market. As their experience increases, they tend to move up the earnings scale. The position of young people in the employment market is already beginning to change in the light of significant reductions in the number of school leavers. Employers are increasingly offering favourable pay and conditions of employment simply to recruit young people.

My Department's new earnings survey, which is based on the pay of a sample of individuals provides some striking evidence. The pay of a group of people identified in 1979 has been tracked over time. About half of them no longer appear in the survey, perhaps because they have left the labour force to retire or bring up children. They may have become self-employed or have been unemployed at the time of the later survey. But we can compare the earnings of the remainder. We can compare the pay of the same individuals in 1979 with their earnings 10 years later.

The figures show that over 70 per cent. of full-time workers in the lowest tenth of earnings in 1979 had moved up into a higher income group by 1989. Almost a quarter of them had moved into the top half of the incomes distribution. There is a particularly strong upward movement among new entrants and re-entrants to the labour market. Perhaps those are some of the yuppies to whom the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West took such exception earlier and then retracted—[Interruption.] I wish it to be recorded in Hansard that he is now muttering about social engineering. If the hon. Gentleman is saying that people moving from their lower income groups of 10 years ago to higher income groups is social engineering, he has a sick impression of self-improvement.

Mr. Randall: That is nonsense. I have moved up and I commend it. We are talking about the way in which some London boroughs have removed older housing, but failed to replace it with housing to rent that people on low incomes can afford. As a consequence, people have been driven from the areas where they were brought up. That causes much distress, splits up families and has a detrimental effect on the social fabric. We know what the motives are.

Mr. Forth: The hon. Gentleman makes a different point from the one with which I was dealing. Examination of our exchanges will show that he is trying to duck the question. I am talking about the opportunities for self-improvement. In our society, which allows and encourages self-improvement, people are able to raise themselves from lower earnings groups to higher earnings groups.

Mr. Randall: Of course. This is obvious.

Mr. Forth: I am glad that, after further reflection, the hon. Gentleman seems not to disapprove of that. Perhaps if he thinks further, he will come round to our point of view that a national statutory minimum wage will cause higher unemployment and disadvantage the people whom he claims to represent.

The next myth is that low pay and poverty are one and the same thing and that all low-paid people are poor. That has never been true, and is not now. Households, typically, have income from several sources and, more often than not, from more than one earner; young people still living at home and married women who work part-time contribute to living standards in the home and normally provide only part of the household income. Low earners, typically, are in those groups. Only 8 per cent. of the lowest tenth of full-time earners are in the poorest tenth of the population. The majority are in the top half of income distribution, with 5 per cent. in the richest tenth. It is absurd to count as impoverished by low pay a managing director's wife who chooses to earn £50 a week working part time in a local bookshop. Yet such people are often included in low-pay statistics by people who argue that there is a low-pay problem and that low pay and poverty are inevitably bedfellows.

The major factor in low income is not low pay but unemployment. The facts could not be clearer: 62 per cent. of people live in households headed by a full-time worker, and only 9 per cent. in one headed by an unemployed person. In the poorest tenth of the population, only 23 per cent. live in households headed by a full-time worker, but 37 per cent. live in unemployed households. Having a job —even a lower-paid job—is always better than being unemployed. Most poor people are not low paid. Poverty has other causes, including old age, disability, unemployment, large families and lone parents. We must constantly be aware of those factors. We are, but Opposition Members are not.

The hon. Member for Tooting made great play of the fact that, at the last count, 12,879 people are out of work in the borough of Wandsworth. No one can be proud of that figure, and I would not claim to be. I shall pick two years at random. In June 1983, 14,420 people were out of work in Wandsworth. In June 1987—I cannot imagine why I alighted on these dates, but they came handily to me —14,459 people were out of work in Wandsworth. Despite recent increases in unemployment in Wandsworth, the number of people without jobs is still significantly lower than in June 1983 and June 1987. I now know why I picked those dates; they were when the Conservatives won large parliamentary majorities in general elections. No doubt the hon. Gentleman will want to reflect on that when he considers the impact of politics on Wandsworth or on the country as a whole.

Mr. Cox: That is a pathetic answer. Does the Minister think that when his comments are read by unemployed people in Wandsworth, that will enhance the great image that the new Prime Minister is seeking to present and the notion of a citizens' charter? All the Minister can do is to tell us to look at what the figures were on two previous occasions. The fact is that now, in June 1991, there are people out of work with absolutely no hope of getting jobs. That is what the Minister should be concerned with, not going back to the figures of several years ago.

Mr. Forth: I am glad that the hon. Gentleman made that point, because I shall now respond to it. I was going to anyway, but I shall do so now even more happily. He raised an interesting and relevant point and asked what the Government were doing about those who had the misfortune to lose their jobs or had difficulty finding jobs in Tooting or anywhere else. I shall now give him an answer.

Every newly unemployed person now receives an in-depth advisory interview, during which all the opportunities for getting back to work are discussed— [Interruption.] I hope that the hon. Member for Tooting is not giggling.

Mr. Cox: I am no more giggling now than the Minister was giggling when I was making my speech about the problems in Wandsworth. I shall listen to the Minister with great interest, and I hope that he tells me and the unemployed people in Wandsworth what the proposal will bring, because that is what we want to know.

Mr. Forth: I do not claim to be a creator of jobs. I hope to avoid destroying jobs and have spent some time explaining how the Labour party has the potential to destroy jobs. That is not the business that the Government are in; they are in the business of creating an environment that not only allows jobs to be developed—mainly by the private sector—but, more importantly, gives the maximum support, through the services provided by the Department's Employment Service, to those who need it in the locality.

First, we ensure that the unemployed are given an understanding interview in order to establish their circumstances and potential for work. We also try to arrange that the same adviser is constantly with newly unemployed people to ensure that their problems are fully understood and dealt with on a continuous basis.

We have introduced special advisory interviews that are available after 13 weeks of unemployment for people whose skills are in demand locally. Extra help is given to the long-term unemployed who do not take up places in employment training, either through job clubs, which have proved a great success, or other offers. Intensive help with job-search from trained advisers is now available over several weeks for those who have the misfortune to be out of work for two years.

In addition, in March my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced an extra £55 million of funding for the Employment Service to ensure that standards of customer service to the unemployed are maintained and, where possible, improved and to provide extra support for people who cannot find work in the first few weeks of unemployment. Some 25 per cent. of people who lose their jobs are off the register again within a month, and 50 per cent. are off it within three months. That illustrates very well the fact that, fortunately for all of us, the unemployed are not now and never have been a static group of people with no hope. The unemployment register changes by up to 300,000 people every month because although, regrettably people lose their jobs, fortunately they find other ones—some of them do so very quickly.

Our aim in the Department of Employment is to do our best to ensure that the process continues as rapidly as possible, but we have not rested there. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, announced another set of measures only last week. As unemployment has been increasing, it has become apparent that the most effective help that we can give some unemployed people is work experience to keep their skills up to date. The main element of the further measures announced last week was a new programme called Employment Action. That will provide work experience on local projects for 60,000 unemployed people in a full year. It will be targeted on those who have been unemployed for six months or more, particularly those living in our inner cities.

The training and enterprise councils, which are starting to become operational in London, will be a major contributor to that programme's process. Equally, the number of places available on ET has been increased so that an extra 15,000 people can this year learn new skills to help them find a job.

Through the measures that I have described, job clubs and other policies, the Department of Employment is taking positive action to address the exact difficulties highlighted by the hon. Member for Tooting. I hope that he did not regard the way in which I gave the figures as complacent—I wanted to set them in context. It is vital that we not only continue to take the problem seriously, but do everything we can to help people find work.

In the time available I have tried to resond to the important points raised in the excellent motion tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South. I have tried to place the problem in context and, given my Department, I have tried to spend some time on the employment aspects of the issue. I did so largely in response to the points made by the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West to show him the error of his ways.

I hope that the Labour party will reconsider its potentially disastrous policies. I hope that it appreciates that the policies that I have outlined are positive and helpful. I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South will agree that the response right across different Departments to the problems raised by his motion has been a positive one, to which he can give his support.

2.5 pm

Mr. Alan Meale (Mansfield): I take great pleasure in being here today. When I read the first part of the motion I jumped on a train from the midlands and came down straight away. That first part is excellent and it could have been written by Labour party Front-Bench spokesmen. I part company with Conservative Members on the second part of the motion. As I listened to the Minister's speech it became clear why that second part had been added. It was done so that a party-political point could be made, but that detracts from the problem that has been set down for discussion.

It was a bit misleading of the Minister to come to the House to try to put the blame for high unemployment on a future Labour Government. He said that the consequences of a Labour Government would be mass unemployment, but we have mass unemployment now. There are millions of people unemployed without taking into account those thousands who have been taken off the register through calculation methods and Government policies. To blame today's mass unemployment on a Labour Government of the future is absolute nonsense.

Twelve years of Tory rule has given us mass unemployment, which is getting worse day by day because the Government continue to follow the wrong economic policies. The Government have forced up interest rates to such a level that every working day many businesses are going bankrupt. The owners of those firms supported the Conservative party in previous elections, but they are now going out of business because of that support.

I pay credit to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) for tabling the motion which has enabled us to debate this important subject. I intend to be brief because I know that other hon. Members on the Conservative Benches wish to participate, albeit briefly.

The first part of the motion says that one way in which to solve anti-social behaviour is to pursue "sound long-term employment measures".

I agree. The problem is that for many years the Government have pursued short-term employment measures and some of our major industries have suffered because of that. The hon. Gentleman comes from my area, the east midlands, where some major industries have been devastated. More than 150,000 jobs have been lost in coal mining, tens of thousands of jobs have gone in steel making and an equal number have been lost in the railways and in other public service sectors.

The hon. Member for Nottingham, South was right to talk about the need to examine the way in which we give priority to housing and use the housing stock. The best way to tackle the housing problem in my part of the world would be for the Government to adopt a different attitude towards public housing. I welcome some of the actions that the Government have taken, for example, in encouraging new house builders, such as housing associations, to establish housing areas in which people can participate in the management of their homes.

In my constituency, and in that of the hon. Member for Nottingham, South, a massive amount of public housing is going down the tubes because of Government policy. Nearly 5,000 council properties have been sold in my area. I am in favour of tenants of council houses who wish to buy being able to do so, but the Government must not insist on retaining legislation that prevents local authorities from using the money obtained from the sale of council houses to build more property to house people who are in the same position as the original tenants who bought their homes. If councils cannot build new property, the problem continues to grow. In my area, millions of pounds are being held in the coffers of authorities and cannot be touched.

There are 868 registered homeless people in my constituency. They could be housed if the Government allowed authorities to construct more houses. It is no answer to say that there are many empty properties in the Mansfield district council area which could be given to the homeless, because there are 9,226 people on the waiting list, 2,700 of them with special needs, some of them terminally ill, some disabled, some severely disabled and many of them pensioners. With an average ratio of 40 empty properties a week, we cannot keep pace with the level of homelessness.

It is a bit rich for the Government to say that they are doing well on the environmental health front. Air pollution inspectors now operate under the auspices of local district authorities and there are inspectorates at the regional level. They have been cut to the bone and the point has been reached when all they can do is drive from one disaster to the next. Do the Government really claim to be sorting out that problem?

The hon. Member for Nottingham, South was right to refer to mental health. It is a scandal for any Government, of whatever political persuasion, to introduce policies that dump the mentally ill back on to the community without the necessary support facilities being provided. It is a disgrace to close hospitals and push the mentally ill on to society when social services departments in shire county council areas cannot cope because of lack of resources. I am aware of the problems that have been created in Nottingham because of the Government's policies for the mentally ill. There are similar problems in my constituency.

It is right that some people who have been in mental hospitals should be returned to the community, but to do that willy nilly without providing extra resources for management is disgraceful.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Nottingham, South on this debate because we should have discussed the problem much sooner. However, the problems that have been expressed clearly on both sides of the Chamber must be dealt with by those in charge. The only way to do so is to provide the resources and be determined to sort out the matter.

2.15 pm

Mr. Jack Aspinwall (Wansdyke): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) for his consideration. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) on initiating this important motion, which has given me the opportunity to present an example of anti-social behaviour which has caused much distress and heartache to many households in my constituency in the past few weeks. My constituents have had neighbours imposed on them—I refer to the influx of nearly 3,000 hippies, who have descended on the peaceful rural communities of Avon county and other west country areas, creating mayhem and havoc.

I strongly support helping those who, through no fault of their own, get into financial and social difficulty. I have always tried to be as helpful and reasonable as possible, as have the local councils and agencies in Avon county. However, the experience that many of my constituents have endured has been unbearable.

There have been intrusions on at least 15 privately owned sites. A large number of people have descended illegally in a wide variety of vehicles. Some are families with children, and packs of dogs including rottweilers and bull terriers are running uncontrolled about the sites. Intimidation of ordinary people, who wish peaceably to enjoy their homes, has caused anger and nearly led to violence.

The operation of moving hippies into an area has not happened by chance but is a highly organised event. Land is identified by scouting groups who test local reaction and can apparently find sites, the ownership of which is in dispute, or which belong to the Labour and Liberal Democrat controlled Avon county council. Some of those hippies are sophisticated and legally knowledgeable, with modern aids such as mobile telephones, CB radios, fax machines and a wide network for the distribution of leaflets and other material. Their arrival at sites is not by chance. The operation is well planned and carried out in such a way that it is extremely hard for the law to be enforced.

Carlingcott—a lovely, peaceful village inhabited by decent, ordinary people—was chosen because there was an ownership dispute over two nearby fields and probate had not yet been granted in an estate, which gave no firm definition to enable legal proceedings or proceedings by the police to commence.

Avon county council has a chosen policy not to take proceedings against hippies who settle on council land because the county council has not complied with the Caravan Sites Act 1968, which behoves them to provide suitable sites. Avon county council has been a soft touch in the hippy world. It is a flagrant breach of duty to the vast majority of the people of Avon not to attempt to prevent the current problems, which continue to worsen.

I have received many letters containing heartbreaking stories from people who do not deserve the problems imposed on them partly because of the council's doctrinaire view. When I visited a hippy site last weekend and asked whether itinerants would be prepared to settle on a well-prepared site with running water and sanitary conditions, they laughed openly. How can the county council ignore the wishes of the vast majority of people for whom it has a duty of care?

The financial implications of the intrusion of hippies are enormous. To contain a site of 2,000 hippies and nearly 400 vehicles, with all the problems involved, costs more than £60,000 in police time alone for a weekend's cover. Other parts of the community have to suffer reduced manning levels to enable a proper police presence to be available in case of an outbreak of violence.

I wish to place on record my thanks to the Avon and Somerset constabulary who deal with the problems arising from the presence of the hippies. Sometimes there is a misunderstanding among those who suffer from the effects of the hippies and the police do not seem to respond rapidly to a situation. I will tell the House of the difficulties encountered in an operation of the complexity and magnitude of that in the Wansdyke constituency, on Charmy Down, Peasedown St. John and other sites.

A common allegation is that vehicles are untaxed, uninsured and unroadworthy. I am strongly assured by the police that all the vehicles in the county are checked thoroughly for ownership proof, insurance, tax and roadworthiness. If vehicles are found to be unroadworthy and if the law is breached, arrests are made under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The police can use section 39 of the Pubic Order Act 1986 to remove people from sites. The Act provides them with discretionary powers to order trespassers to leave land in certain circumstances. If trespassers knowingly fail to obey such an order, they commit a criminal offence. Trespass is a most complicated matter which usually rests with the civil courts and is certainly not a criminal offence. There is the additional problem of huge numbers of people congregated together. I wonder whether the wisdom of confrontation would prove beneficial to the community in the end.

The police can make arrests under section 39. I ask the House to imagine 2,000 men, women and children, as well as dogs and so on, the men being arrested, the degree of force that would have to be used, and the women and children being left on the site and becoming the subject of local social services and education departments and everything that the public expect, followed by the likelihood that the arrested persons could plead not guilty, be bailed and returned to the site. The police have no powers whatever to move the vehicles. In such circumstances, striking the balance between the freedom of the individual and the well-being of the community loses some of its meaning. There must be a way of solving this difficult problem which is creating further anti-social behaviour.

It is well know that a major source of income is the benefits cheques which are collected from the local social security office. Perhaps sanctions would help. For example, the payment of resources could be stopped until certain conditions are observed, such as residency or registration as being able and willing to work.

I have seen various types of hippies. During my visit last weekend to the Peasedown St. John site I met some young people who were reasonable, clean, interesting and could have been the sons and daughters of any family in the land. I asked them why they had come to the hippy site. They said that they had heard through the grapevine that there was to be a pop festival and that they were going to enjoy themselves. I might add that the media sometimes lose the balance between providing news and dealing with community interests. Widely publicised through television, radio and the press, the Peasedown site became national news. It was easy to tell from the programmes exactly how to get to the site, which added to existing problems.

We must find places that are sufficiently remote and away from the general population where sites can be prepared, perhaps on a seasonal basis, with adequate toilet facilities, water, and perhaps even electricity, so that young people can attend pop festivals with little or no interference to ordinary people. It is not beyond the bounds of possibility that the noise baffles used at major airports could be adapted to prevent objectionable noise over wide areas. Noise is another form of anti-social pollution on hippy sites and it is extremely difficult to control it.

The environmental health officers erected noise detection meters, but the legislation is ponderous and it would have been extremely dangerous for a small number of police officers and environmental health officers to enter a site. Even if they were able to serve abatement notices, nothing in the legislation empowers them to deal quickly with noise pollution. It is difficult to overestimate the effects on small villages in which people live peaceably in their homes of incessant beating of drums and loud music disturbing the peace night and day. The effects on ordinary people—on elderly people, children and shiftworkers—are unacceptable.

Anti-social behaviour has many effects on society and it is always the law-abiding people who suffer. The added problems caused by drugs, excessive alcohol, noise, uncleanliness and unlawfulness and by damage to persons and property all take their toll on sites such as those that I have described. It is every citizen's right peaceably to enjoy his life and home. Anti-social behaviour imposed on others by itinerants is wholly unacceptable. I welcome today's motion, which has enabled me to express these views.

2.26 pm

Mr. Steve Norris (Epping Forest): I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) made his speech long merely because he was awaiting my arrival in the Chamber and I apologise for not hearing all of it. I shall toss my notes aside and truncate remarks which could have filled one and a quarter hours so as to fit them into three and a three quarter minutes.

We should be in no doubt about why the Fabian Society rightly concluded that a national minimum wage would cost nearly 1 million jobs or why the Government concluded that it would cost almost 2 million jobs. The reason has perhaps not emerged from today's debate, but I can give practical examples of how it works.

I well remember in my old constituency of Oxford, East going to see a lady who had decided to convert her front room into a hairdressing salon so that she could practise a profession that she had learnt before she married and had a family, and so that she could give employment to a couple of her friends—and, more importantly, offer a service to people in the area which they could never have afforded at some of the larger shops. They wanted to enjoy having their hair done by neighbours in a friendly atmosphere.

Along came a man from the wages council saying, "I am terribly sorry, my dear, but you cannot possibly do that—you are not paying your neighbours enough." "How do you mean?" she asked—"I do not draw as much as you are asking me to pay these ladies out of the business myself; I am doing it for fun because I can do it here at home and because my neighbours can earn themselves a little money. We are not doing it to make the difference between life and death. We simply want to afford one or two luxuries in life." "I am sorry," he said, "That is no business of mine—You either pay these ladies the money, or you close down." So she closed down, thereby losing out herself and disadvantaging her neighbours who had helped her in the shop for a bit of pin money and all the people on the estate who used to enjoy a good value-for-money service.

We have heard a great many assertions about how hundreds of thousands of jobs will be lost, but there is no secret about the sort of example that I have cited. It is terribly sad; I have every sympathy with those who believe that minimum wages are a standard to be borne by those who care about the poor, but it is necessary to think through the argument. Doing that makes one realise that poverty is best alleviated by creating real job opportunities. We should remember that more than a million people have jobs now who did not have jobs when the Government came to office.

Secondly, nothing is more likely to create a fear of crime and to worry and frighten elderly people than the sight of sacks of rotting rubbish left in the streets, of broken glass, of windows boarded up, of graffiti and vandalism. As we know from research—this is not a bland assertion—those signs of a lawless, anarchic society are exactly those which make an elderly person fearful of leaving their own home and a prisoner within it. That is the result when a local authority such as Liverpool, Lambeth or Hackney loses control—and that is how anti-social behaviour can be genuinely defined. That appalling neglect is the record of those Labour authorities, and I hope that the electorate of Walton at least will take account of it when they vote on 4 July.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South on the way in which he framed his motion——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. The sixth item to be considered on today's Order Paper, the Commonwealth of Britain Bill, has against it the words,

"Queen's Consent to be signified."

I have a letter from the Home Secretary indicating that the Queen has given her consent to the Bill, and I wonder whether it would be in order for that consent to be indicated by a Privy Councillor before the Bill is put before the House for consideration.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): I note the right hon. Gentleman's point, but we have not reached that item.

2.34 pm

Mr. Neil Thorne (Ilford, South): In 1816 the pact of Segavli was signed because the British East India Company had been trying to push the boundaries north of India. It met some fierce resistance from Nepal. As a consequence, it was found impossible to proceed any further. Therefore, the pact was signed, which defined the boundaries between India and Nepal. It provided also for the recruitment of soldiers into the British Army. That was 175 years ago. Since then, many Nepalese have served in various Gurkha regiments. About 500,000 men served between 1939 and 1945, and of those 52,000 were either killed or wounded. Thirteen Gurkhas won the Victoria Cross for valour and 13 officers attached to Gurkha regiments were also awarded that supreme honour. No more than 8,000 Nepalese soldiers are now serving in the Gurkhas in the British Army. There are more serving in the Indian Gurkha army, which was created on independence in 1947.

The Select Committee on Defence decided that after Hong Kong was handed over in 1997 it would be important to establish exactly what the future of the Gurkhas would be. The Committee carried out an inquiry and issued a report. The report was responded to in May 1989 by the then Secretary of State for Defence, who gave an undertaking that no fewer than 4,000 Gurkhas would remain within the British Army.

It is important that the relationship should continue and I am sure that the then Secretary of State's promise will be maintained and upheld despite any proposals that are contained in "Options for Change". The salaries and pensions of Gurkha soldiers make a considerable contribution towards the income of the Nepalese people and after such distinguished service by Gurkha soldiers I am sure that the aid will be allowed to continue in that way.

In Nepal there was an hereditary prime ministership that continued for over 100 years. That came to an end with a revolution in 1953 which was led by King Tribhuvan. He then became King in his own right and the monarchy assumed control. Prime Ministers were then appointed from the membership of the Panchayat. That continued under King Mahendra until he was succeeded by the present King Birendra. In 1980 there was some debate about whether a different form of democratic control should ensue. It was decided, however, as a result of a referendum in 1980, that the Panchayat system was the system that the majority of the population wished to remain. That continued for 10 years until the beginning of last year, when there was a certain amount of dissatisfaction with the then system and various people and factions wanted the introduction of a multi-party system.

The King decided, on his own initiative, to overcome the objections and he introduced a multi-party democratic system and gave 14 months to allow it to be developed before general elections were to be held. That decision was entirely of his own making. It was a courageous decision because only 10 years previously a referendum had decided on a different system. The King felt that the majority of his people wanted to move to a multi-party system and, contrary to what many members of the international press corps would have us believe, he instituted it himself.

The elections were held on 12 May. At the invitation of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, I was one of three observers that it had been invited to appoint. The hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) and my hon. Friend the Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) were also invited to attend so that we could see for ourselves whether those elections—the first to be held on a multi-party basis for a long time—were free and fair.

There were 64 international observers, divided into 21 teams. We were distributed throughout the country and the different teams—comprising groups of three or four—had different experiences. However, when we all came together again in Kathmandu after polling had been completed, we discovered that there had been only 57 irregularities in the 1,200 polling districts—a commendable figure. Those 57 districts were repolled the following day. When irregularities were found they were corrected the following day, so it was decided that the elections had been free and fair. We all felt that a good exercise had been conducted.

The elections resulted in an overall majority being obtained by the Nepal Congress party. Indeed, Prime Minister Girija Prashad Koirala has now taken up his post and is running the democratic Government that has been created. The Prime Minister has thanked the King for his action in instituting the election and for ensuring that it was carried out, to the best of his ability, in a free and fair way.

We obviously required considerable support during the campaign and I am glad to say that the British contingent provided a large number of Land-Rovers to facilitate the easy movement throughout the country of many of the teams. In fact, his excellency Timothy George—the British ambassador in Kathmandu—is getting on extremely well with all sections of the community from the King down, and as far as we can ascertain from our observations he is doing an extremely good job and is spoken of extremely well. He and the present Nepalese ambassador, Major General Bharat Kesher Simha, have a large role in maintaining and ensuring that the friendship that has developed over the past 175 years continues.

The country is not very well endowed with many of the mineral resources that so many other regions of the world enjoy, especially the middle east and Africa. It has an extremely large quantity of water, which is especially suitable for the generation of hydro-electric power. It also has the most charming population imaginable, so it is a good part of the world to visit, both to see the magnificent scenery and to be among its charming people. Tourism is expensive in that it needs a lot of infrastructure. To make it popular, it requires the many facilities to which westernised tourists are accustomed, the lack of which means that they will go to other parts of the world.

There are many things that we can and should be doing to ensure that this new democracy is given every possible opportunity. We can assist, for example with roads and other communications. The terrain is rugged, and heavy rains and monsoons have a devastating effect on roads, and are liable to wash them away quickly down the steep terrain. Therefore, roads require a lot of maintenance. We are particularly well placed to give advice and assistance on road building.

We can be of great assistance in the building of hydroelectric systems and of ways to distribute the power to encourage its use both in Nepal and elsewhere in Asia. We could be doing an awful lot in reafforestation. Sadly, during the trade and transit dispute between India and Nepal two or three years ago, the supply of kerosene, for heating and use in cooking, to the peasants in the villages dried up. As a result, they had to cut down vast areas of woodlands so that they had wood for cooking fuel. This has had not only a serious effect on the Nepalese economy and on soil erosion, but a knock-on effect in that, if the waters are not held back by forests and allowed to proceed in an orderly fashion on to the plains of Bangladesh, flooding occurs. Reafforestation is high on the agenda, as we can do much to assist both Nepal and Bangladesh.

In the negotiations between India and Nepal to bring about an amicable trade and transit agreement, I have to thank my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler), who is present today, and who helped me in getting through to the Indian authorities the message that this delay was causing damage. I am delighted that trade is now easier, but that damage must be made good. We should use every possible opportunity to put right the matter as quickly as possible.

We can help in many little ways. I noticed that the Nepalese have closely followed our parliamentary system. While we were there, we went to visit the facilities that are being constructed. They are busy building their second chamber. I hope that we can give the Nepalese Parliament a gift, such as a Speaker's chair, permanently to remind both the British and the Nepalese of our long-lasting friendship. There are so many ways in which we could help. We have an obligation because we have a long friendship with Nepal. We have been asked for very little in the past in return for the vast amount of blood that has been spilt on our behalf among Nepalese. It is up to us to go out to them rather than to wait for them to come to us for assistance.

Britain was the first to have a diplomatic mission in Kathmandu and it was to London that Nepal's first mission came when it started to become interested in international affairs. In view of our special position, we should do as much as we can to ensure that our thanks are properly and adequately expressed.

2.50 pm

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): It is a great pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne). I was one of the observers who were privileged to go to Nepal and witness the elections. It gave one the opportunity not only to have an insight into a beautiful country but to get to know some charming, hard-working and talented people. The area of Nepal that I visited was Pokhoral, which is famous for its mountains and trekking. I found that the election was undoubtedly freely contested, with a few very small infringements. There is no doubt that the election in Nepal can take its place with genuine elections anywhere in the world.

In the area that I visited, I saw men and women standing for hours in line waiting for their turn to vote. I saw elderly and disabled people carried on the backs of men along mountain tracks often for several miles so that they could have the opportunity to vote. That showed clearly how much the people of Nepal welcomed the opportunity to take part in the election and how much they support democracy.

As the hon. Member for Ilford, South said, the result of the election has done two things which we can only welcome. First, it has produced a Government who have a strong enough majority to provide decisive government. Secondly, it has produced a strong enough Opposition to ensure that the voice of those who do not always agree with the Government can be heard. I am sure that we all agree that that is good for democracy.

As the hon. Member for Ilford, South said, it is now the time for us to consider what help we can give. There is great respect in Britain for Nepal. Again, the hon. Gentleman touched on that. Sadly, many people here will never have the opportunity to go to Nepal but they most certainly look with pride to the role that the Gurkha troops have played for many years in the British Army.

It is against that background that any policy of help and involvement that the Minister may be able to tell us about today will receive great support. Of course, the nature of that help is a matter for discussions between the Nepalese and British Governments. In view of what I saw in the area of Nepal that I visited, I hope that two issues will be considered. The hon. Member for Ilford, South mentioned the development of a road and transport infrastructure in Nepal. The other equally important issue is the need to develop an education system.

I visited many schools in the area of Nepal where I stayed. One has to say that they were very basic. But when we met the children and young people and talked to them we saw their great enthusiasm to find out where we came from and know something about us. That is a clear sign of their ability and desire to learn.

I hope that, coupled with help in developing the education system, we will offer to the Nepalese Government the facilities that we have in Britain to provide further and higher education opportunities in farming, the health service and transport. I am sure that there are talented young men and women in Nepal who would welcome the opportunity to develop their education and knowledge through the services and skills that we have in Britain.

It is delightful to see the Minister in her place and to know that she will reply to the debate. All hon. Members have high regard for her. Even if she says, "I cannot help you", we know that she is one of the few Ministers who listens to what we say and, if possible, acts on it.

It is a pleasure to take part in the debate and I hope that the Minister will tell us what help the Overseas Development Administration will be able to give Nepal.

2.55 pm

The Minister for Overseas Development (Mrs. Lynda Chalker): May I say how grateful I am to my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne) for giving us this opportunity to discuss aid to Nepal and to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) for his exceptionally kind remarks? Both hon. Members' knowledge of Nepal is highly respected not only in London but Kathmandu.

It is entirely right that the House should be considering our relationship with Nepal at a time when it has joined us in enjoying a directly elected parliamentary assembly. That change is all the more commendable for being mainly peaceful and well-organised, as both hon. Members said.

[Mrs. Lynda Chalker]

All those involved deserve the highest praise for the manner in which they worked together towards the common objective. Their success is reflected in the general and peaceful support for the new constitution and in the completion of the elections on 12 May.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South asked whether the House would give a gift to the Parliament of Nepal. That is a matter for Mr. Speaker and the House authorities, but I am sure that he will read what my hon. Friend said.

The House has played a role in supporting the democratic process in Nepal and will continue to do so. My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South and the hon. Member for Tooting attended the election as observers. It was interesting and helpful to hear their views on recent developments.

You may know, Madam Deputy Speaker, that Mr. Speaker has kindly agreed to make available to the new assembly two of the much coveted places on the House's course for parliamentary secretariats, and the Principal Clerk of the Table Office will visit Nepal shortly. That is a good start in the relationship between the two Parliaments.

The aid programme played a part in the elections. The Overseas Development Administration refurbished Government Land-Rovers to make them roadworthy for electoral duties. We donated books and texts to the library of the new assembly. Such moral and practical support is much appreciated, even more so when it comes from the House.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South and the hon. Member for Tooting asked about the future. They may have read in the press that on Tuesday I announced that in the next year Britain would commit £50 million from its bilateral aid programme for direct support for good government in developing countries. I hope and expect that that will include new commitments in Nepal, within the areas indicated for the aid such as the modernisation of central and local government, assistance to the legislature and training for police, customs and civil servants. Our aid to Nepal will reflect our wish not only to help the democratic process but to further the close and substantive relationship that we have.

Sir John Wheeler (Westminster, North): My right hon. Friend will know of my interest in the police. Is it possible for the Overseas Development Administration to consider a bursary to allow a senior police officer from Nepal to attend the overseas staff course at the police college?

Mrs. Chalker: I shall certainly consider that matter, but I cannot comment off the top of my head. It will depend entirely on what the Nepalese Government want to spend their resources, but I can assure my hon. Friend that we shall certainly look at that issue.

Our support for Nepal is shown by the aid we are giving it. When all the returns are completed, we expect our aid disbursement for the past financial year to be about £19 million—about £1 per head of population in Nepal. That reflects our response to the particular difficulties, which, as my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South and the hon. Member for Tooting have said, faced Nepal during the trade and transit dispute with India. Happily that is now behind us and the underlying trend in our aid has been strongly upwards during the past three years. The doubling of our aid since 1987-88 is a good sign of the growing relationship between the two countries.

Today's debate has reinforced my intention to seek early discussions with the new Nepalese Government. I expect to have a substantial aid programme in Nepal in the coming years. We need to discuss that, once the new Nepalese Government have had an opportunity to determine their policies. I hope to propose to the new Government that we should hold aid talks at official level in the early autumn. It will then be my joy, I hope, to visit Nepal early next year.

One of the reasons why Nepal has so greatly warranted British support has been because, despite being one of the poorest countries, it has shown a willingness to tackle its own problems which is an example to many other countries. It has adopted a policy of structural adjustment under the aegis of the World bank and the International Monetary Fund. It has not been committed to that programme for very long, but the project is already yielding sufficient benefits to show the people of Nepal that it will be worth while. Nepal could not have overcome the difficulties and hardships of the trade and transit dispute if it had not started from a firm economic base. Undoubtedly, those sound economic policies have increased donor confidence, including our own. That is extremely important in a country where 60 per cent. of the development budget is aid funded.

Some 7 million to 8 million of the 19 million population of Nepal live in absolute poverty, by which we mean that their income is insufficient to afford what we would normally regard as a minimum amount of food. The overwhelming majority of those people are subsistence farmers, which is why we have made a long-term commitment to help farmers in the hill regions which are particularly disadvantaged. Our hill research stations at Lumle and Pakhribas have adopted a farmer-oriented approach and are widely seen as the antidote to top-down planning, while our Kosi hills project has made encouraging progress, not least in the management of local communities of the diminishing forest resources.

Unfortunately, the progress that has been made in agriculture and in the economy more generally is being eroded by rapid population growth. The population has doubled in the past 30 years and is projected to double again over the next 25. Therefore, we believe that it is important that we have an effective programme to provide facilities for voluntary family planning, which I hope will be a priority for the new Government—one in which we will be glad to help them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South spoke about hydroelectric power. I believe that it is important for Nepal, but it is also important that we take particular care, when helping Nepal, to ensure that all its projects are environmentally sound. We shall work with Nepal in that way if that is its wish, but we must be alert not to worsen the great environmental traumas that beset that part of the world.

We help by running the Dharan hospital through the aid programme and in many other ways. We have an aid package of £3 million to help that project. We supply technical co-operation officers and Voluntary Service Overseas medical officers. We hope to build new wards for that hospital to help the Nepalese people. That is one way in which we have continued to help Nepalese people since the hospital came into our care 18 months ago—it was previously the Gurkha hospital. I can assure my hon. Friend that, in many other ways, we shall ensure that the Gurkha hospital continues to be of value to Nepal, but that is an issue for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

I agree very much with my hon. Friend that support for forestry in Nepal will be vital, not just for that country, but for India and Bangladesh. The conservation and regeneration of forests is vital to the region. It is good that we have agreed that the forests will be managed and used by local communities in Nepal and we shall help with the establishment——

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MADAM DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at four minutes past Three o'clock.

London Underground

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the agreed expenditure for investment in the Northern Line of London Underground which will take place over the next three years.

Mr. Freeman: Only major investment projects which are called in are agreed by Ministers. We have approved the reconstruction of Angel station, at a total cost of £72 million, which will be completed in that period. The hon. Member should approach London Underground for details of other investment on the Northern line. None of it has been called in for approval.

Bus Companies (Prosecutions)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions have been brought against bus companies for (a) drivers' hours violations and (b) vehicle standards violations in each year since 1985.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1985 the Department of Transport enforcement staff have brought the following prosecutions against bus companies for drivers' hours violation:

	Number
1985-86	786
1986-87	369
1987-88	492
1988-89	814
1989-90	116

Prosecutions for drivers' hours and roadworthiness offences are also undertaken by the police, but the statistics are not broken down between individual categories of vehicles.

The vehicle inspectorate undertakes roadside checks of passenger carrying vehicles and prohibitions are placed on vehicles which are found to be unroadworthy, banning the further use of the vehicles on a public road until faults have been rectified. The number of checks and rate of prohibitions since 1985 are:

	Vehicles checked	Prohibition rate per cent.
1985-86	12,575	10·7
1986-87	17,767	10·3
1987-88	19,649	11·8
1988-89	17,747	11·6

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual number of retirements by civil servants under rule 3.10a of the principal civil service pension scheme since that rule became effective on 1 April 1987.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that the number of non-industrial members of the home civil service who have retired early with actuarially reduced pension and lump sum benefits is as follows:

Public Sector Pay

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider establishing an independent arbitration tribunal to decide on pay award disputes between the Government and the National Union of Civil and Public Servants and other unions representing civil and public employees.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The terms of the long term pay agreement between the Treasury and the NUCPS allow, subject to the agreement of both parties, for differences to be referred to the Civil Service Arbitration Tribunal—CSAT. Other long-term pay agreements between the Treasury and other unions representing non-industrial civil servants contain similar provisions.

The CSAT, which is an independent tribunal established under the provisions of the civil service arbitration agreement, consists of an independent chairman and one member drawn from a panel of persons appointed by the Secretary of State for Employment as representing the Minister for the Civil Service and one member drawn from a panel of persons appointed by the Secretary of State for Employment as representing the trade union side of the national Whitley council.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the range and scope of his current inquiries into the effect of actions by banks on small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Officials from Her Majesty's Treasury and the Bank of England are looking at the banks' interest rates and charges to businesses, and the way that lending policies are being applied.

National Farmers Union

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many ministerial meetings have been held with the National Farmers Union between 1 May 1990 and 30 April 1991; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: No ministerial meetings were held between Treasury Ministers and the National Farmers Union between those dates.

Interest Rates

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take action to prevent the establishment of a cartel of clearing banks with regard to the interest rate margins afforded to small businesses.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 June 1991]: As is well known, the Treasury and the Bank of England are looking at the concerns that have been raised about the interest rates charged to small businesses. If anyone has any evidence of collusion between the banks, they should submit it to the Office of Fair Trading, which will of course consider it.

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a copy of his clause 50 explanatory chart in the Library, after adding a bar for each year to illustrate the financial year for which each annual tax payment satisfied the Revenue.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 13 June 1991]: I have placed in the Library a copy of the explanatory chart referred to in the Standing Committee debate on clause 50.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Hampton Schools

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will ask Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools to investigate the long-term consequences of the offer in 1987 by Richmond-upon-Thames borough council of 30 more places to children aged five at Hampton infants school than there was room for and the extent to which the undertaking by the headteacher an employee of the local education authority that this group of children would be funded for all their infant and junior years has been adhered to;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of local management of schools at Hampton school, particularly relating to the funding of a fourth full-time teacher for the remaining children admitted to Hampton junior school in 1987.

Mr. Fallon: I understand that for the September 1987 intake Richmond education authority decided that 120 places should be offered at the Hampton infant school rather than the normal 90. The authority also gave an undertaking that additional teaching, welfare and capitation resources would be made available to meet the needs of the children in that year group; and that no other children at the school would be disadvantaged because of the larger numbers being admitted.

I also understand that the authority is of the view that it has honoured these undertakings by providing additional accommodation at the Hampton infant and junior schools and at the Hampton Hill school; and that it has also provided the additional teaching and welfare resources it promised. Since April 1990, the school has been operating under the authority's scheme for the local management of schools.

Under LMS, the Hampton junior school receives a budget based mainly on the number and age of its pupils. It therefore receives additional funding for the extra pupils who were admitted to Hampton infant school in 1987 and who have since transferred to Hampton junior school. This is also the case for those children from that year group who subsequently transferred to the Hampton Hill school.

Within the national statutory framework and subject to the conditions in their LEA's scheme, it is a school's governing body which determines how to make best use of their funding to meet the particular educational needs and priorities of the school. Accordingly, it is for the governors of Hampton junior school to determine the level of staffing and the need for a fourth full-time teacher for this particular age group cohort.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what effect the introduction of local management of schools has on the ability of local education authorities to fulfil undertakings given to provide extra funding for an additional teacher for a cohort of pupils which is more numerous than the other cohorts in the school, due to an original error by the local education authority in allocating children to the school in a particular year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Under LMS, funds are allocated to schools through a formula on a clear and objective basis. This means that the funding available is distributed fairly: similar schools receive similar budgets which will depend mainly on the numbers and ages of the pupils. As LMS funds pupils, a school with a cohort of pupils which is larger than its other cohorts will receive additional funding on the basis of those extra pupils.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has offered through his Department to local education authorities about the implementation of the Children Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The Department, in consultation with the Department of Health, is issuing comprehensive guidance on the implementation of the Act, all of which is going to local education authorities. Copies will be placed in the Library. Advice of particular interest to LEAs is contained in the Department's circulars 2/91 and 3/91, about the approval of independent schools to admit children with statements of special educational need and the approval of special schools, and in the document "Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children". Guidance on the operation of education supervision orders will be published shortly.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the total numbers for staff employed at each of the AFRC institutes since 1980 and his estimates up until 1993; and, in each case, which are (a) scientists and (b) non-scientist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Agricultural and Food Research Council-funded institutes were restructured during the period 1985 to 1987. For ease of reference, the figures for staff in post are shown on the basis of the present institutes of research.

The figures for actual numbers employed at 1 April in the relevant years to 1990 and an estimate for 1991 are shown in tables 1 and 2.

2. IHR became part of the British Society for Horticultural Research (BSHR) on 1 April 1990. The BSHR has recently been renamed as Horticulture Research International (HRI). The figures in brackets show the number of AFRC staff seconded to HRI.
3. The figures for IACR for 1980-84 include the former Letcombe Laboratory and the Weed Research Organisation, which closed in 1985 and 1986 respectively. They also include the former Soil Survey and Land Resource Centre, which was transferred to the Cranfield Institute of Technology in 1986-87.

4. The figures for IPSR for 1980-86 include that part of the former Plant Breeding Institute which was purchased by Unilever plc in 1986-87.

The number of staff employed on 1 April 1992 and 1 April 1993 will depend on a number of factors, including the funding available to the AFRC through the science budget and the extent of commissions from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and external funded research. The present estimate is that the number of scientific staff employed at the AFRC at its institutes and Horticulture Research International will be about 1,935 and the number of non-scientific staff will be about 1,300 on each date. No breakdown of anticipated staffing levels at each AFRC institute is available. These figures are expected to remain constant into 1993-94.

PRIME MINISTER

Foundation for Sports and the Arts

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about progress towards the establishment of a Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

The Prime Minister: I am pleased to say that the three members of the Pools Promoters Association have now confirmed that they will set up the Foundation for Sport and the Arts. I understand that the pools promoters are now working hard to finalise the trust deed under which the foundation will operate, and will soon be appointing the first trustees. The way is now clear for the Government to make the reduction in pool betting duty announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget speech and new clauses to the Finance Bill have been tabled.

Holy Loch

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Prime Minister what agreements there are between the United States of America and United Kingdom Governments concerning the establishment and use of the United States base at Holy Loch.

The Prime Minister: Details of the agreements between the United Kingdom and United States Governments for the use of the Holy Loch by the United States Navy are confidential between the two Governments.

ENVIRONMENT

Hostel Deficit Grant

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid out in hostel deficit grant to housing associations in England in the last five years for which figures are available; and how many units of accommodation were covered by hostel deficit grant in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of units of accommodation provided for from hostel deficit grant in each of the past five years.

Mr. Yeo: Hostel deficit grant payments to housing associations in England in each of the last five years were as follows:

1986-87	6,628
1987-88	9,457
1988-89	19,005
1990-91	38,500

Information relating to the number of units of accommodation covered by hostel deficit grant payments in each of these years is not available, but currently there are approximately 37,000 bed spaces in respect of which housing associations are able to claim hostel deficit grant.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Statutory Instruments on local government finance he intends to publish prior to the summer adjournment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department will be laying before Parliament the following statutory instruments before the summer adjournment:

The Non-Domestic Rating (Transitional Period) (Further provision) Regulations

These will make amendments to the transitional arrangements for non-domestic rating in respect of statutory changes of occupier.

The Non-Domestic Rating (Payment of Interest) (Amendment) Regulations

These will amend the rules governing the payment of interest in respect of overpayments arising as a result of alterations to the non-domestic rating list.

Repeals and Consequential Amendments Order

This will make a number of repeals and amendments to previous Acts, especially the Local Government Act 1972.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place copies in the Library of the responses he has received on his consultation paper on local government finance; and if he will list in the Official Report all those organisations which have expressed opposition to his proposal for seven property bands.

Mr. Portillo: It is the Department's policy to place in the Library a list of all those who have responded to consultation. Copies of the responses themselves are normally deposited in the Department's library, and made available for inspection. We are currently studying the representations which have been received.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement before the summer adjournment on the results of his consultation exercise on local government finance.

Mr. Portillo: We are currently studying the representations which have been received. The next steps will be made clear in due course.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to make an announcement on his proposed outline financial settlement for local authorities for 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: When he is ready to do so.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he offers to local authorities on the legal processes necessary to enforce the payment of community charges.

Mr. Key: The Local Government Finance Act 1988 widened the methods available to local authorities, compared with domestic rates, to recover community charges if a chargepayer does not respond to a reminder, summons or the issue of a liability order. Authorities may now attach the chargepayer's earnings, obtain deductions from income support or distrain and sell goods. Authorities can also, of course, come to an arrangement with the chargepayer for paying off his debt. If these methods fail to produce payment of the debt, an authority can apply for a warrant for committal to prison. If the court decides that a chargepayer's failure to pay was due to wilful refusal or culpable neglect it can impose a prison sentence of up to three months. My Department has issued a practice note and a series of letters which give guidance on all aspects of the operation of the community charge enforcement system.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to establish the local government commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We are currently consulting on our proposal to establish a new local government commission. We intend to introduce legislation to establish the commission in the next Session of Parliament.

Power Station, Isle of Man

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to undertake an assessment of the potential environmental effects on mainland Britain of the proposed power station sited in the River Neb valley, Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I am advised that the proposed power station at Peel in the Isle of Man is small in size—40 MW—and will replace an existing power station on an adjacent site. I am further advised that the Manx Electricity Authority has taken Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's published guidance into account in formulating its proposals and that there is expected to be an overall environmental improvement.

Drinking Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current water treatment plants in England and Wales producing drinking water, whose aluminium content is above the European Community limits; and by how much each treatment plant is in excess of these limits.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not held centrally. Summary information on aluminium in water supplies throughout England and Wales during 1990 is being collated and will appear in the report of the chief inspector of the drinking water inspectorate, to be published in July.

Local Government (Sick Days)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many days were lost through sickness in local government in the last available year, and what is the number of statutory sick days allowed in each sector.

Mr. Key: My Department does not collect information on time off through sickness in local government. The terms and conditions of employment of local authority staff, including time off through sickness, are, by section 112 of the Local Government Act 1972, a question to be settled by each local authority.

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial year 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department does not keep central records of such purchases and the information could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

House Building

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for house building in 1990 for each local authority, breaking down the figures into private, local authority, housing association and new town units.

Mr. Yeo: The figures requested are shown in Table 1(a) of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", No. 97—April 1991—a copy of which is in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish statistics listing the number of homeless applicants and the number of people housed under the homeless persons legislation by each local authority in England and Wales in each of the last five years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Yeo: The available information relates to the number of households on whom inquiries have been completed by local authorities under the homelessness legislation and, of these, the number accepted and found accommodation. This is already published.

The reported figures for individual local authorities appear quarterly in "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales". Annual totals for 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989 are given in table 9(b) of volume Nos. 82, 86, 90 and 94, respectively. The 1990 totals are not yet published but figures for the four quarters separately are in table 9(a) of No. 94 and in table 9 of Nos. 95 to 97 of the same publication. Copies are in the Library.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Heseltine: Information about full-time and part-time public appointments and levels of remuneration for the past five years for which my Department was responsible is given in the annual HMSO publication "Public Bodies" and "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations". Copies of these publications are held in the Library of the House.

Environmental Action Guide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to produce the "Environmental Action Guide"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The "Environmental Action Guide" is now being printed and should be published by HMSO, on behalf of the Department of the Environment, in July. Copies will be placed in the Library. The more detailed advisory notes on specific technical and management topics will follow as soon as possible.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial year (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Heseltine: Within my Department responsibility for expenditure on hospitality is delegated to senior managers, subject to detailed rules. No central record is kept of the individual items. Total expenditure for my Department, including the Property Services Agency services, the Building Research Establishment agency, the Historic Royal Palaces agency and the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre agency, is as follows:

1991-92	[2]20,000

[2] To date.

Local Government Review

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action would be necessary for a parish or town council in England to be dissolved.

Mr. Key: A parish or town council in England can only be dissolved while the parish or town remains as a local government area, if there are fewer than 150 local government electors in the parish or town. In such cases the district council, on the application of the parish meeting, may by order dissolve the council.

A district council may review a parish or town and propose that its area should cease to form part of any parish. Such a proposal, if endorsed by the Local Government Boundary Commission and implemented by an order of the Secretary of State, would result in the end of the parish or town as a local government area, and with it the end of the parish or town council.

Tribunals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given for a new title of the present valuation and community charge tribunals once the new council tax comes into effect; if he will be issuing new guidance notes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Government's consideration of the council tax appeal arrangements will include the matters mentioned by the hon. Member.

Community Charge (Students)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether students normally resident in Northern Ireland but who spend approximately nine months of term time attending university in England, Scotland or Wales are required to pay community charge for July, August and September, when residing in their parents' homes in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Key: Full-time students in England, Scotland and Wales are treated as having their sole or main residence at the place where they are resident for the purpose of undertaking the course. They are therefore liable to pay the community charge at their term time address from the day the course commences until the day it ceases, including vacations.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many (a) self-contained units and (b) bed spaces in housing association rehabilitation schemes received initial project approval for housing association grant in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and are planned for 1991-92 excluding re-improvements to existing properties owned by housing associations or local authorities for (1) Greater London, (2) inner London and (3) each London borough;

(2) how many units or bed spaces in housing association rehabilitation schemes received project approval under the Housing Corporation's new programme for rent in each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 and are planned for 1991-92 excluding re-improvements to existing housing association properties for (a) Greater London, (b) inner London and (c) each London borough distinguishing between self-contained units and bed spaces.

Sir George Young: These are matters for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to respond to the hon. Member direct. The subsequent reply will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Cavity Wall Insulation

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for improved standards of thermal insulation in building regulations in respect of cavity wall insulation; and if he will revise the approved document entitled "Conservation of Fuel and Power" so as to require U values to be calculated on a more realistic basis.

Mr. Yeo: The Building Research Establishment is carrying out a study to see how the higher standards for the conservation of fuel and power in the building regulations, which came into force last year, are working in practice. The results of this study, together with other work, will be used as a basis for considering how the standards in the building regulations can be further strengthened.

I have received from Eurisol a copy of its report of an investigation into the heat loss through certain cavity wall constructions. I have asked the Building Research Establishment to examine the report, and its supporting evidence, and advise on any implications for the building regulations.

Aggregates

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the length of time that will be available for public consultation on the draft of a revised mineral plan guidance note 6.

Mr. Yeo: It is not the intention to publish draft guidelines for consultation until the end of this year at the earliest. A decision will be taken at that time over the time length for public consultation but it is expected to be three months.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations, including staff and running costs, in 1979-80 and in each following year; and what is his estimate for 1990-91 and budget for 1991-92.

Mr. Heseltine: Further to the answers which I gave to the hon. Member on 25 and 30 April, Official Report, column 492, and column 137, respectively, the latest estimate of outturn for 1990-91 is £7·7 million and the current budget for 1991-92 is £6·8 million; the latter figure excludes Property Services Agency services and the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre where budgets have not yet been finalised.

Drought Precautions

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures have been taken to secure water supplies in the event of a hot, dry summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: While skilful resource management and average rainfall last winter restored the levels of most surface water reservoirs, the cumulative effect of two hot, dry summers, and three relatively dry winters has severely reduced the levels of water stored underground in aquifers. In parts of the south-east and east, some groundwater levels are at the lowest recorded for the time of year.

The prime responsibility for ensuring the adequacy of water supplies rests with the water companies, under the Water Act 1989. But the National Rivers Authority is responsible for abstraction licenses and for ensuring that water resources are used judiciously. I have therefore been consulting Lord Crickhowell, chairman of the National Rivers Authority, about the measures that have been taken to secure water supplies should we see a return to hot, dry weather this summer. This statement reflects these consultations.

Contingency planning to overcome potential difficulties has been carried out, drawing on experience gained over the past two years. Supported by the Government, the NRA has placed particular emphasis on the need for close liaison with the water undertakers and other interested parties, such as the National Farmers Union. A number of ad hoc groups are also in place for assessing the situation and developing plans to alleviate possible difficulties. In accordance with the contingency plans developed in this way, appropriate measures are being phased in as the situation demands.

Among the first steps aimed at conserving resources has been the widespread use of publicity campaigns to alert the general pubic, industry and agriculture to possible shortages of water. Such campaigns have been promoted both by the NRA and water supply undertakers through the press, radio, television and also the distribution of leaflets, public meetings and visits to schools. These campaigns are planned to continue throughout the summer in areas at risk and are generally aimed at increasing awareness of the situation and encouraging the wise use of water.

Plans to use water resources to best effect are being implemented as necessary by reducing abstractions from sources that are running low, such as aquifers in the south-east, while increasing supplies drawn from rivers and reservoirs. Where appropriate, existing pipeline links have been supplemented by advancing the construction of those planned for the future or by laying temporary pipes. Also, in some cases water companies and the NRA have applied to my right hon. Friend for drought orders authorising increased abstractions or reduced discharges, which has helped to refill reservoirs during the winter and secure additional resources for the summer, and water companies in some areas have been able to develop new bore holes or recommission previously abandoned sources.

To reduce demand, water companies have introduced hosepipe or sprinkler bans in the affected areas and these have been shown to produce worthwhile savings. A sprinkler can use in one hour as much water as an average family in one day, or even more; indeed, when demand is high in summer, bans are sometimes necessary because distribution systems cannot cope.

In collaboration with the NRA, and in consultation with NFU and others, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has sought improvements in the way that water is applied to crops and the manner in which restrictions should best be imposed. The result is a leaflet on good irrigation practice. Apart from the potential savings in the use of water, the guidance provides for early warning by the NRA of the need to impose restrictions on spray irrigation. It is now being applied in the NRA's Anglian region.

In the longer term, the NRA is making plans to ensure that resources are developed to meet demand into the next century. As a first step, the NRA has published a preliminary survey of the prospects for public water supplies to the year 2011, in a report entitled "Demand and Resources of Water Undertakers in England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library.

In addition, the NRA is investigating options for the strategic development of water resources including major new water transfer schemes. It is taking a fresh look at options hitherto considered uneconomic, such as a national grid and desalination, and expects to publish initial results this autumn. These results will then contribute to the NRA's development of a broad national development strategy to meet expected demand from all sources.

Mineral Workings

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he proposes to take to protect the environment, in addition to any schemes of working that may be agreed by local planning authorities, in those areas where (i) a dormant Interim Development Order—IDO—permission is re-activated following registration or (ii) mineral working continues to take place under active IDO permissions, in the period before the introduction of any changes to the powers of local authorities established under the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981 as a result of the current review of that Act;

(2) when he will publish the findings of the working group currently undertaking the review of local authorities' powers under the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981;

(3) what steps he proposes to take to compensate property owners who suffer blight as a result of discovering they live in or adjacent to prospective mineral workings following registration of IDO permissions;

(4) what plans he has to include environmental and amenity organisations in the working group currently undertaking the review of local authorities' powers under the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will list the members of the working group currently undertaking the review of local authorities' powers under the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981, and if he will state the basis on which members were appointed.

Mr. Yeo: The amendments that the Government introduced in the Planning and Compensation Bill at Report stage on 16 May to deal with IDOs, provide that a dormant IDO permission cannot be reactivated until a scheme of operating and restoration conditions has been approved by the mineral planning authority. In any other case, such a scheme must be submitted for the mineral planning authority's approval within 12 months of the permission being registered.

These amendments will ensure that in a relatively short period of time the details of all valid IDO permissions will be known, that the permissions are brought up to acceptable standards and that dormant sites cannot be reactivated without warning or proper conditions.

It would not be appropriate to make provision for compensation for property owners who find themselves living adjacent to mineral working sites. However, the proposals in the Planning and Compensation Bill will ensure that all sites operate to acceptable standards. Statutory blight provisions only apply where there is a formal indication that land may need to be acquired by a body possessing compulsory powers. Where nuisance arises from development carried out under statutory powers, legislation is in place to compensate affected landowners for depreciation. Where land is affected by nuisance from private development, it is open to any owner to take action against those causing the nuisance or for him to seek damages through the courts.

The amendments we have introduced to deal with IDOs do not preclude the mineral planning authority from taking action under their existing powers, introduced by the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981. The Government have announced that they are reviewing these powers and this review is being undertaken by officials with the assistance of a small informal working group comprising three representatives of the County Planning Officers Society and three representatives of the minerals industry. The review, which is already under way, is examining the technical details of the provisions. The Government have no plans to change the membership of the working group. However, interested bodies are welcome to submit representations, and any proposed changes arising from the review will be the subject of full public consultation, including environmental and amenity groups, before decisions are taken. I hope that this consultation exercise will take place next year.

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has drawn from his recent visit to Heveningham hall.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 14 June 1991]: My right hon. Friend visited Heveningham hall on 2 June. His impression was that, while much remains to be done, good progress has been made with the restoration work recently. English Heritage will continue to monitor the situation and keep us informed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Offal

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the spreading on land of protein material derived from specified bovine offal.

Mr. Gummer: The specified offals may not be used in human or animal feed, and therefore normal commercial outlets have disappeared for the small quantity of material resulting when these offals are rendered—some 25,000 to 30,000 tonnes per year, out of the rendering industry's total annual output of some 400,000 tonnes of protein material.

The Government asked the Tyrrell committee to advise on its possible use as a fertiliser. The committee's view was that it should not be used. The risk of the agent being present or transmitted was remote, but it was better to be super-safe. There were alternative means of disposal—burning, burial or use as fuel. So on balance it would be wise not to use material derived from specified offal as fertiliser.

It is therefore intended to make an order under the Animal Health Act to require that the protein material obtained from specified bovine offal should be disposed of either on licenced landfill sites, by incineration, or by such other means as may be licensed by the agriculture Departments.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Curry: The readily available information about the appointments for which the Department is responsible, all of which are part time, is given in "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations" and annually in "Public Bodies", copies of which are in the Library.

Oil-seed Rape

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the market for the expected harvest of the oil-seed rape crop this year; and what estimates he has made of the likelihood of a surplus.

Mr. Curry: There is crushing capacity for some 1·5 million tonnes of rape seed in the United Kingdom, and significant quantities of rape seed are also incorporated directly into animal feed. There is an export market for United Kingdom rape seed elsewhere in the European Community. It is too early to predict how the market for the 1991 crop will develop.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence there is that the production of oil-seed rape is injurious to the health of humans or to the ecological interest of the immediate locality.

Mr. Curry: In common with other agriculturally grown or naturally occurring vegetation, the pollen of oil-seed rape may affect some species, including human beings. However, I am not aware of any conclusive scientific evidence that this crop is injurious to the ecology of the immediate locality. Matters concerning human health are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Like any other crop, cross-pollinisation can occur and it is quite normal to protect crops by zoning where purity is needed.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the area devoted to the cultivation of oil-seed rape this year; and what was the area so used in 1990 and 1989.

Mr. Curry: The information sought is as follows:

1990: 390,000 hectares
1989: 321,000 hectares.

Surpluses

Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the current level of surplus produce in British intervention stores; and what proposals he has for disposing of them.

Mr. Curry: Tables showing EC and United Kingdom intervention stock levels are deposited in the Library of the House each month. Any disposal of intervention stocks has to be approved by the European Commission and a number of schemes are currently operating for the commodities held in United Kingdom stores.

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give figures for the common agricultural policy budget for each year since 1985, including the amount set for 1992, giving figures separately for (a) the guarantee section and (b) the guidance section.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is given in the table:

Thames Estuary (Marine Aggregates)

Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Kent and Essex sea fisheries committee and other fishing interests about proposals for an increase in extraction of marine aggregates in the shallow coastal waters of the Thames estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Kent and Essex sea fisheries committee and other fishing interests have expressed concern that an increase in extraction of marine aggregate from the outer Thames estuary would harm fisheries.

The Government's policy is that licences will be granted for extraction of aggregate only where this is possible without unacceptable damage to sea fisheries and the marine environment. The fishing industry will be fully consulted on any application. The Ministry will ensure that any application for a licence will be given a careful scientific scrutiny to ensure the protection of fisheries.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts spent by his Department on the Agricultural and Food Research Council for each year since 1979 in (a) cash and (b) real terms.

Mr. Gummer: MAFF commissions with the Agricultural and Food Research Council since 1979-80, in both cash and real terms, are as set out in the table.

Year	cash £ million	[1] real terms (1979-80 = 100)
1979-80	30·4	100.0

Blue Ear Pig Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his veterinarians have been drafted into (a) the Lincoln veterinary centre and (b) other areas, as a result of blue ear disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: One veterinarian spent two days on detached duty at the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre and veterinarians have spent a total of 38 man days on detached duty in other areas as a result of blue ear pig disease.

HOME DEPARTMENT

"The Feldberg Inquiry"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reasons his Department's inspectors gave for persuading Professor Feldberg to use rabbits rather than cats for the experiments detailed in the Medical Research Council report "The Feldberg Inquiry".

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 5(6) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 requires special justification for the use of cats, dogs, primates and equidae. Following implementation of the Act, it became standard practice for inspectors to require research workers who were using cats to change, whenever possible, to alternative species. As a result, during the summer of 1989, when Professor Feldberg's research reached a stage when his use of cats was no longer considered essential, the inspector urged Professor Feldberg to change to rabbits, so that his authority to work on cats could be withdrawn.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the experiments detailed in Medical Research Council report "The Feldberg Inquiry" were justified under section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: In September 1989, Professor Feldberg sought the inspector's permission for a change to his project licence in connection with research he was undertaking into the regulation of blood sugar. He wished to replace a procedure involving the injection of drugs into the brain with one which he considered could produce a similar effect but involved the heating of the abdomen of the rabbit.

Contrary to the comments made in the Medical Research Council's report, the licence amendment would not have been granted unless the adverse effects had been weighed against the potential benefit of the work, as required by section 5 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The change proposed involved replacing a procedure with a less invasive technique. The inspector's judgment that the proposed change to Professor Feldberg's work was justifiable was an opinion confirmed some months later by two of the three independent experts consulted by the Medical Research Council.

Fox Hunts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will seek a report from the chief constable of (a) South Yorkshire and (b) West Yorkshire on the total number of police involved in policing fox hunts during the last 12 months; and if he will give the cost involved;

(2) if he will seek a report from the chief constable of (a) South Yorkshire and (b) West Yorkshire listing the number of occasions during the last 12 months, when police video cameras were used to film hunt protesters, showing the locations where they were used.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The policing of hunts and the deployment of officers are operational matters entirely for the discretion of the chief officer. I understand that, over the past year, a total of about 25 officers from South Yorkshire Police have at various times attended fox hunts to deal with disorder. The costs involved are not readily available and could not be determined at disproportionate cost. West Yorkshire police has not deployed officers specifically to police fox hunts. Neither force has used video cameras at fox hunts on any occasion.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The readily available information about the appointments of which my Department was responsible in the past five years, including salary details, is given in "Public Bodies" which is published annually and in "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations" which also gives information as to when appointments fall for renewal. Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he accepts the Medical Research Council's recommendations that (a) the establishment of Home Office inspectors needs to be increased, and (b) their role to be re-examined with a view to their being more involved in the monitoring of the treatment of animals during experiments.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 11 March 1991 to a question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) at column 335.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-purpose bred animals were supplied to the Charing Cross and Westminster medical schools within the last year; by whom they were supplied; and for what specific experiments they were supplied.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not normally our practice to provide such detailed information about individual scientific procedure establishments, but I have the agreement of the medical school to say that no such animals were supplied within the last year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to take in order to detect contraventions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 by personal and project licence holders.

Mrs. Rumbold: The controls to ensure the proper conduct of animal procedures within scientific user establishments operate at a number of levels. Certificate holders for establishments designated under section 6 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are answerable to my right hon. Friend for ensuring that the requirements of the Act are fully observed. In addition, the management of research projects and the control of the application of procedures to animals are achieved through conditions attached to project and personal licences. In many cases, project licences are discussed with inspectors and advice is given before a formal application is made. Project licence holders and personal licensees are answerable to certificate holders and to the Home Office.

Infringements of the Act, or of licences issued under it, come to light generally during visits made by inspectors, when they observe procedures being carried out, discuss the progress of the research and examine the records which are required to be kept. Most visits by inspectors are unannounced.

The appendix to the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain", gives the number of infringements dealt with each year, together with details of the action taken.

Deaths in Custody

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by ethnic group, and by year for the last 10 years, the number of deaths that have occurred whilst a person was held in (a) prison and (b) police custody.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total number of deaths in prison in each year since 1981 and the number of deaths by ethnic origin since 1989 are shown in table A. Information on ethnic origin for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The total number of deaths in police custody in each year since 1981 is shown in table B. Information on ethnic origin is not available.

Prisoners

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners have ever been in care.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Police (Sick Leave)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Sussex constabulary on the number of hours lost through sick leave by the Sussex police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the calendar year 1990, the Sussex police recorded a total of 30,163 days sick leave—based on an eight-hour day. This amounts to 4·4 per cent. of available working days or an average of 10·1 days per officer. Both figures are below the national average.

Accounts of positive action being taken by the Sussex police to control and monitor sick absence appear in the chief constable's report for 1990 and in a report by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary on the force inspection undertaken in November last year. Copies of these are available in the Library. A further interim inspection is due to take place in November 1991. My right hon. Friend does not propose to call for a separate report.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of days lost through sickness by the police for the last available year, and the number of statutory sick days allowed in each section.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the calendar year 1990 an average of 11·6 days per officer were lost through sickness in provincial forces and 12·5 days in the Metropolitan police. In line with general legislation, regulation 34 of the Police Regulations 1987 (as amended) provides for officers to take seven days self-certificated leave per year. This is at the discretion of the police authority. Thereafter, a doctor's certificate is required.

Red Cross Report (Detainees)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, further to the reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 7 June, he intends to make any changes to the conditions under which detainees would be held in future in the light of the comments made in the Red Cross report.

Mrs. Rumbold: Any exceptional detention arrangements which might be necessary in a future emergency would be considered in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time.

Criminal Convictions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of males aged 15, 20, 25 and 30 years, respectively, have had a serious criminal conviction.

Mr. John Patten: The information is in the table. This information has been produced from a series of cohort studies of persons born in 1953, 1958 and 1963, published in Home Office statistical bulletin 32/89.

Males born in 1953, 1958 and 1963 and convicted of a Standard List[1] offence.

Community Charge

Mr. Martin Redmond (Don Valley): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been heard and found proved for non-payment of (a) the community charge and (b) the uniform business rate at magistrates' courts in (i) Doncaster, (ii) Kensington and Chelsea and (iii) Wandsworth for the latest date he has available; and if he will show in his Answer what percentage of the population this represents.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Community Charge		Uniform business rate
		per cent.
Doncaster	9,429	4·3	21
Kensington and Chelsea	8,830	8·3	423
Wandsworth	19,342	9·8	751

The percentages of the population these figures represent, as shown in brackets, are based on the number of persons entered on the relevant community charge registers. The figures for Kensington and Chelsea and Wandsworth cover the period 1 April 1990 to 12 June 1991 while those for Doncaster cover the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991.

Local Radio

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the indirect ownership of independent local radio stations by local authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the provisions of schedule 2 to the Broadcasting Act 1990, local authorities, and any body corporate in which a local authority is a participant with more than 5 per cent. interest, are disqualified from holding an independent local radio licence.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many local authorities have investments in holding companies with shares in independent local radio stations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for the Radio Authority, and not the Government, to enforce the provisions in the Broadcasting Act 1990 relating to ownership of independent local radio stations. It is, therefore, a matter for the authority to monitor investment by local authorities in such stations.

Police Training

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the training needs of the police in relation to the provisions of the Road Traffic Bill; and what guidance he expects to give on this new legislation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office will be issuing guidance to chief officers of police on the provisions of the legislation. The guidance is being prepared in consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers and training needs will be identified in that process.

Wolds Remand Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many companies have been invited to tender for the Wolds remand prison contract.

Mrs. Rumbold: Nine.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases for the non-payment of poll tax are awaiting trial at Crown courts.

Mr. John Patten: None. Community charge enforcement proceedings in England and Wales are conducted in the magistrates courts and the Crown court has no jurisdiction.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the advice he is giving to local authorities regarding enforcing Sunday trading provisions before the House of Lords' appeal on the European defence is determined.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have not generally considered it either appropriate or necessary to issue guidance to local authorities about enforcement of the law on Sunday trading. The recent decision of the House of Lords to adjourn its consideration of the appeal against the decision of the High Court in the cases of Stoke-on-Trent and Norwich city councils v. B&Q plc in order to seek further clarification of certain aspects of the law from the European Court of Justice has not caused us to alter this stance.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the available statistical information in the origin of asylum seekers and the change in pattern over recent months and years.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 7 June 1991]: Information for 1991 is only available for the number of principal applicants excluding dependants. The number of such applications by the main nationalities since 1988 is given in the table.

Fighting Dogs

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific action he proposes to safeguard the public from breeds of fighting dogs, including the pit bull terrier; and if he will consider banning the importation, breeding and sale of these breeds in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 20 May 1991]: As the hon. Member will know, the Government have recently introduced the Dangerous Dogs Bill aimed at the control of fighting dogs like the pit bull terrier and Japanese tosa and their eventual elimination from this country. An import ban on these dogs took effect from midnight on 21 May.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Civil Servants

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants from each Government Department are currently working in the office of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Community.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of civil servants from each Government Department currently working in the office of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Community at Brussels is:

	Number
Foreign and Commonwealth Office	[1]45
Department of Trade and Industry	6
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	5
Her Majesty's Treasury	2
Her Majesty's Customs and Excise	2
Department of Employment	2
Scottish Office	1
Overseas Development Administration	1
Department of Transport	1
Northern Ireland Civil Service	1
Bank of England	1

[1] including all support staff.

Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to request the United Nations Secretary General to re-establish the office for emergency operations in Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The office for emergency operations in Africa provided excellent inter-agency co-ordination from 1984 to 1986. Since its experiences are reflected in current United Nations working practices, re-establishing it now does not automatically guarantee improved co-ordination. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the German Foreign Minister launched a joint initiative on 9 June to improve and support the way the United Nations responds to humanitarian disasters and emergencies including those in Africa.

Libya

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his response to the recent proposals to the Foreign Secretary of Libya for the improvement of relations with the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to respond to these proposals. There is a wide gap between us and the Libyans over conditions that will allow for an improvement in relations.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding the frontiers of the European Community as far as it relates to Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Gibraltar is part of the Community by virtue of article 227(4). Gibraltar's frontier with Spain is therefore an internal EC frontier for all purposes except as regards free trade in goods where Community rules do not apply because Gibraltar is not part of the Community customs territory.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what areas of interest he has in the future Hong Kong airport that are not matters for the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British Government's interest in Hong Kong's new airport is to assist in doing everything possible to make it a success and thereby promote Hong Kong's stability and prosperity.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees recommendations for camp conditions which (a) have and (b) have not been adopted for each of the camps in which Vietnamese boat people are currently detained.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The UNHCR's recommendations on food, nutrition and water standards have been adopted, or in some cases exceeded, in all detention centres in Hong Kong. The recent influx of new arrivals has made UNHCR recommendations for toilet provisions and space standards difficult to achieve in all camps.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the statistics kept regarding the boat people detained in the camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The Hong Kong Government maintain basic statistics on the total number of Vietnamese in the camps in Hong Kong, the number of men and women over 16 and the ages of those who are determined not to be refugees or who wait screening. Statistics that require further research and processing of information are not readily available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the work of the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: Since its inception the Serious Fraud Office has brought 54 cases involving 123 defendants to trial, 85 of whom—over two thirds—were convicted. In 1990-91 the average duration between acceptance of a case for investigation by SFO and its committal or transfer to the Crown court was 11·8 months. I believe that we are making good progress in reducing the time taken to deal with such cases.

Confessions

35. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Attorney-General what weight the Crown prosecution service gives to uncorroborated confessions obtained in police custody.

The Attorney-General: The code for Crown prosecutors requires that the prosecution be satisfied that confession evidence has been properly obtained and has not been obtained by oppressive behaviour. A prosecution may be brought on the basis of an uncorroborated confession provided that the Crown prosecutor is satisfied that it was properly obtained and that there is a realistic prospect of a conviction.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of impending changes in the legal aid system on access to legal redress for patients in Wales who believe they have suffered through medical negligence.

The Attorney-General: The safety net proposal which is canvassed in the Lord Chancellor's recent consultation paper on eligibility for civil legal aid would extend legal aid to those who may currently be ineligible but who face high costs. It could be of particular help to litigants in medical negligence cases in which costs may be high.

Judge Pickles

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor has obtained a recording or a transcript of Judge Pickles' comments on the application of the law on a BBC TV programme on Tuesday 11 June; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has seen reports of the judge's comments. The judge is to retire at the end of the month and the Lord Chancellor therefore proposes to make no further comment.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Myanmar

39. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase overseas aid to Myanmar; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: All aid to the Burmese Government was suspended in a joint decision by the EC Twelve following the repression of dissent in 1988. Other major donors acted similarly. We have no plans to resume aid until there is an improvement in the human rights position in Burma and significant movement towards democracy.

Environmental Pollution

41. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between the Minister for Overseas Development and her European counterparts to tackle environmental pollution in central and eastern Europe.

Mrs. Chalker: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and his Ministers have held many discussions with EC colleagues on environmental improvement. We have already been able to help both through multilateral channels like the EC PHARE programme and the British know-how fund which has so far funded nine environment projects.

Development Aid

43. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he envisages in the level or orientation of United Kingdom development aid in the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Planned expenditure on the aid programme is set out in the FCO departmental report Cmnd. 1502. In allocating our aid, increased attention is being given to supporting good government, including economic reform, alleviating poverty, protecting the environment, and population programmes.

British Aid for the Kurds

44. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of mutual assistance between his Department and the voluntary organisation British aid for the Kurds.

Mrs. Chalker: British aid for the Kurds has been successful. The ODA has extended considerable help, including the provision of transport for relief goods which it has collected.

Aid

45. Mr. Hain: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the breakdown for the latest year for which figures are available of the proportion of overseas aid as a percentage of gross domestic product allocated to Africa, Asia, Latin America and the remaining areas of the world.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1989 the proportion of United Kingdom gross national product devoted to official development assistance was 0·31 per cent. There is no geographical breakdown for the destination of official development assistance. In 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, the geographical distribution of gross public expenditure on aid including our contributions through multilateral agencies, was as follows: Africa 44 per cent.; Asia 31 per cent.; Latin America 4 per cent.; other 8 per cent.; unallocated 13 per cent.

Medical Aid (The Gulf)

Mr. Dalyell: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what medical aid has been given to combat typhoid, cholera, hepatitis and water-borne diseases in southern Iraq and Kuwait.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Nations agencies and the Red Cross and Red Crescent have begun health programmes in Iraq as well as in neighbouring countries. Britain has contributed US$16 million to the UN appeal for the region launched last month and £2·5 million to the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Liberian Refugees

Sir David Steel: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government are currently giving to Sierra Leone, in particular to help with the influx of Liberian refugees.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 12 June to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

Somaliland Republic

Mr. Cartwright: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to provide humanitarian aid and assistance to the people in the area of the self-declared Somaliland republic.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not recognise the "Somaliland Republic". We want to help Somalis in need wherever they are in the country, but insecurity hampers the relief effort. So far this year we have made available £2 million and 8,000 tonnes of food directly to Somalia.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount spent by his Department in the 1990-91 financial year on management and computer consultancy contracts, excluding hardware and software purchases; and if he will list each management or computer consultancy contract awarded by his Department in 1990-91, giving in each case the name of the consultancy firm, the subject of the assignment and, if appropriate, the executive agency for whom the contract was carried out.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total amount spent by the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments in the financial year 1990-91 was £5,350,401. Due to way in which data are stored, it has not been possible to provide the "subject of assignment" details in respect of each consultancy beyond the name of the client company involved; to attempt to do so in every case would involve disproportionate cost.

Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Government will enact legislation which would allow for replacement grants in respect of housing property.

Mr. Needham: The legislation to permit the introduction of a replacement grant is expected to be laid before Parliament in the spring of 1992 and to come into operation later that year.

Schools (Advisory Services)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the value in cash and percentage terms of moneys allocated to each education and library board in Northern Ireland which is retained by each board for expenditure on advisory services to schools;

(2) whether moneys retained by each education and library board to fund advisory services is eligible to be distributed to schools, for governors to decide whether to use the money to purchase expert advisory services or for other educational purposes.

Dr. Mawhinney: The estimated expenditure this year and the percentage which this represents of its total block grant allocation is as follows:

Belfast	1,328	1·09
Western	1,623	1·33
North Eastern	1,630	1·14
South Eastern	1,542	1·28
Southern	1,608	1·14

Finance for the boards' advisory services is an excepted item and is not available for distribution to schools.

Weights and Measures

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on what representations he has received on the proposal to permit the 35 ml metric measure for the sale of spirits; and when he expects to lay orders on this matter.

Mr. Needham: I have received 13 replies to the Department of Economic Development's consultation paper. I am now considering those replies. No decision has yet been made on whether to implement the proposal nor on when any order on the matter would be laid.

Tooth Decay

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in tabular form details of the average number of decayed, missing or filled permanent teeth in 12-year-old children in Northern Ireland in each health board area.

Mr. Hanley: The mean numbers of decayed, missing and filled teeth—DMFT—in 12-year-olds in Northern Ireland in 1989 were as follows:

Health and Social Services Board	DMFT
Eastern	3·2
Northern	2·9
Southern	2·8
Western	3·3

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the water supply in Northern Ireland is now fluoridated artifically; and what is his policy for ensuring the optimum level of fluoridation in the interests of securing better dental health.

Mr. Hanley: Just under 1 per cent. of the population live in areas in which fluoride is added to the public water supply. Two major fluoridation schemes are under consideration by health and social services boards which are responsible for deciding if the water authority should be asked to increase local fluoride levels. These would cover some 43 per cent. of the population. Where fluoride is added to water supplies, the Water (Fluoridation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 requires that, as far as is reasonably practicable, the concentration of fluoride in the water supplied to customers shall be maintained at 1 mg per litre which is the optimum level for reducing dental caries.

UDR Four

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will order a judicial inquiry into the case of the UDR four.

Dr. Mawhinney: The power to consider any form of review of this case rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. At present he is examining the possibility of a reference to the Court of Appeal, under the terms of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980. While this is the position the question of a judicial inquiry does not arise.

Ryan Park, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for that area of ground, at the rear of Ryan park in the borough of Castlereagh, which is no longer used for a sewage screening plant.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The area of ground was formerly the site of a small sewage treatment works which was replaced by an underground sewage pumping station to serve Ryan park. The Department of the Environment is considering a recent approach from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to release a strip of the site to improve access to a play area.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland into which public pension scheme staff of the Fair Employment Commission contribute.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The staff of the Fair Employment Commission are members of the principal civil service pension scheme.

Membership of the scheme is not limited to civil servants; staff of a number of other public bodies are also members of the scheme. Membership of the scheme does not either confer or imply civil service status.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply of 4 June, Official Report, column 196, how many of the members of staff of the Fair Employment Commission referred to are in each category of employment.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The information requested, as at 1 January 1991, is as follows:

	Protestant	Roman Catholic
Operational staff	18	19
Support staff	12	8

SOCIAL SECURITY

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether it is the practice of his Department normally to disregard payments of criminal injuries compensation placed on trust for two years only; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will review his Department's requirement that victims in receipt of criminal injuries compensation payments placed on trust should be required to have their affairs managed for them by trustees with a view to making it discretionary;

(3) if his Department will consider reviewing its rules governing payments made by trustees to victims in receipt of awards of criminal injuries compensation with a view to eliminating their present complicated and restrictive terms; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Compensation payments arising from a personal or criminal injury which are placed on trust are disregarded indefinitely in all the income-related benefits—income support, family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit. The nature and terms of a trust are wholly the responsibility of the injured person or other person acting on his or her behalf, after taking any appropriate legal advice. The existing rules enable payments to be made out of the trust in a wide range of circumstances without affecting the injured person's entitlement to benefit. These rules are kept under review, although there are no plans to change them at present.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to-date.

Miss Widdecombe: Total expenditure was £25,477 in 1989-90; £75,778 in 1990-91; and £2,847 so far in 1991-92.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to ensure that the implementation and administration procedures for disability working allowance will not be adversely affected as a result of the measures contained in the Child Support Bill.

Mr. Scott: The provisions contained in the Child Support Bill have been taken into account in developing the procedures for administration of disability working allowance and will not delay or adversely affect the start of the benefit in April 1992.

Family Credit

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total value of spending on family credit since its introduction in 1988.

Mr. Jack: The total value of family credit expenditure in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91—estimated outturn—is £1,303 million in cash terms and £1,394 million at 1990-91 prices.

Allowances

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those allowances administered by his Department in regard to which applications are (a) fully dealt with by local offices in all but exceptional circumstances or when there is a formal appeal, (b) dealt with entirely by non-local offices on a national or regional basis and (c) dealt with through a mixture of local and national/regional means.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Maintenance Settlements

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his plans for ensuring that maintenance settlements are reviewed regularly and keep pace with the growing cost of bringing up children as they grow older.

Mr. Jack: The Child Support Bill, currently before the House, provides for a new system of maintenance for children. The new system will ensure consistency of decision making by the use of a standard formula to calculate child maintenance. This formula provides a means of updating the maintenance to be paid and there will be provision for regular reviews of all maintenance assessments to take account of changes in the circumstances of the absent parent or the parent with care.

Social Security Applicants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his policy that social security applicants in any part of the country should be able to reach any part of his Department on the basis of a local call charge.

Miss Widdecombe: Our current telecommunications policy is under review. No decision has been made about the introduction of local call rates for our customers.

Information Divisions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure by his Department's information divisions, including advertising and other paid publicity activities, staff and running costs, in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Miss Widdecombe: The information on staff and running costs for 1988-89 is not available in the form requested, because the Department of Social Security was then part of the Department of Health and Social Security. Advertising and other paid publicity activities were run as a separate programme and can be costed; staff and running costs, however, were not separate and to obtain this figure would be at disporportionate cost:

1988-1989
Publicity	12,334,342
1989-1990
Publicity	15,598,464
Staff	1,157,000
Running costs	70,000

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Recycling

Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, what his Department is doing to encourage the use of recyclable materials by industry.

Mr. Leigh: Encouraging the greater use of recyclable and recycled materials by industry is an important element of the Government's programme to bring about higher recycling levels in the United Kingdom. A range of measures is being taken to this end, including the development of new industry standards to encourage the use of recyclable and recycled materials; providing financial assistance for the development and dissemination of recycled technology; and for the identification of new end-uses for recycled materials. My Department also favours using recycled products, wherever they are available of adequate quality and representing value for money. Major purchasers can by their behaviour encourage the development and stabilisation of markets for recycled products. We are also asking industry to come forward with its own proposals for using more secondary materials.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the bodies concerned with recycling which he has met in the last year and the dates of those meetings.

Mr. Leigh: During the past year, Ministers have met with numerous bodies involved in recycling. Most recently, my right hon. Friend met members of the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment on 7 May, and on 20 May my hon. Friend the Minister for Corporate Affairs met some 30 organisations involved in the recovery and recycling of packaging materials.

Departmental Video Purchases

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Leigh: This information is not readily available and could not be collected except at disproportionate cost.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years, together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Leigh: The readily available information about the public appointments for which my right hon. Friend is responsible is given in "Public Bodies 1990" and in "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations", copies of which are in the Library.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Leigh: The Department of Trade and Industry's total expenditure on entertainment was as follows:

1989-90	377
1990-91	365
1991-92	56

Overseas Investment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by region, the major investment projects attracted from overseas since 1983, together with the capital cost of each project, and the amount of grant offered.

Mr. Leigh: The tables list by region details of the major investment projects located in Great Britain since 1 January 1983 that have received grant under the regional selective assistance scheme or the revised regional development grants scheme towards the cost of the project. Information on major investment projects supported by the original regional development grants scheme is available only at disproportionate costs. All the projects listed have capital costs of £10 million or over. For projects supported by regional selective assistance, the table shows the amount of grant accepted by the company. For projects supported by regional development grant, the amount of assistance shown is the total amount paid to the company to date.

Telephone Selling

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration he has given to the establishment of a register to combat the problem of unsolicited telephone selling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The branch systems general licence issued under the Telecommunications Act 1984 provides for the establishment of a register on which people who do not wish to receive unsolicited telephone sales calls can place their numbers. Once this register is in place, anyone who makes such a call to a number on the list will be in breach of the licence, and ultimately the Director General of Telecommunications can remove the right to operate under the licence from persistent offenders, making them unable to use their telephone systems. Oftel is discussing the arrangements for the register with interested parties and will issue a press notice as soon as the scheme is ready to be launched.

Arab Boycott

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the Arab boycott of United Kingdom companies trading with Israel.

Mr. Sainsbury: Her Majesty's Government are opposed to and deplore all trade boycotts that lack international support and authority. It is not however our policy to interfere with the commercial decisions of British firms.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will set out in tabular form for each of the European Community countries, including the United Kingdom, such information as he has on their statutory provisions regarding compliance with the Arab trade boycott of Israel; and what action he intends to propose to harmonise legislation on this matter after 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 June 1991]: The following table shows the legislative position of European Community countries as regards the Arab trade boycott of Israel.

Country	Statutory provisions
Belgium	None
Denmark	None
Irish Republic	None
France	[1] —
Germany	None
Greece	[2] —
Italy	None
Luxembourg	None
Netherlands	[3] —
Portugal	None
Spain	None
United Kingdom	None

[1] Article 31 (known as the "Krieg amendment") to Law No. 77574 of 7 June 1977 in effect made it illegal to comply with the boycott in France, although the article was couched in general terms. However, since this prevented French firms from trading with the Arab countries, an administrative instrument was introduced in 1981 which permits the anti-boycott legislation in effect to be ignored.

[2] Greek legislation is in support of the Arab boycott of Israel.

[3] Dutch legislation is a general law relating to all boycotts except those agreed by the Netherlands and organisations to which the Netherlands belongs and boycotts imposed solely on the grounds of economic policy.

Companies have to notify the Minister of Economic Affairs of requests made to them to apply a boycott. Annual reports to Parliament on the operation of the law are required.

Vehicle Repairs and Servicing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will investigate the number of complaints of which trading standards offices are aware, regarding misleading claims on turn-around time made by garages over repairing, body repairs, or servicing of motor vehicles; and whether he will give particular attention to such complaints made on behalf of (a) women and (b) retired persons.

Mr. Leigh: I have consulted the relevant trading standards organisations on this question but they are not aware of any significant number of complaints about misleading claims on vehicle repair turn around times.

NESL, Sunderland

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now publish in full the details of the agreement between the Government and the European Commission which resulted in the closure of North East Shipbuilders Ltd., Sunderland.

Mr. Leigh: It is not customary to publish exchanges between the Government and the European Commission which, as in this case, contain information of a commercially confidential nature.

The essential details of the exchanges pertaining to the closure of North East Shipbuilders Ltd. and associated matters have however been made publicly available in the minutes of evidence taken before the Trade and Industry Select Committee in October 1989.

Sequestration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 283, if he will list any further assistance or representations received from individuals, organisations or political parties on the subject of personal sequestration in Scotland.

Mr. Redwood: The only representations my officials have received about personal sequestration in Scotland since my answer on 2 May have been from the Consumer Credit Association. This organisation was amongst those I listed previously and no other assistance or representations have been received since.

European Coal and Steel Community

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the utility and the future of the European Coal and Steel Community.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 June 1991]: The Government would prefer the immediate termination of the European Coal and Steel Community, whereupon coal and steel would be governed by the EEC treaty in the same way as other industries. While disappointed that the European Commission does not share that view, we recognise the practical difficulties of attempting to achieve immediate termination and can support the Commission's conclusion that the ECSC treaty should be allowed to expire on schedule in 2002, subject to a much less interventionist application of its provisions in the meantime. We were therefore pleased to note the Commission's view that a much less interventionist interpretation and application of the ECSC treaty is indeed necessary.

BT Licence

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are contained in the British Telecom licence relating to protection of the rights of the present shareholders, and to protection of customers against an effective offshore-owned monopoly, in the event of relocation of BT's domicile overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 June 1991]: BT is subject to strong controls through its licence conditions, the regulatory powers exercised by OFTEL and general competition law. These apply irrespective of who the shareholders are and where the company's offices are located. The Government hold a special share in BT which protects certain provisions in the company's articles of association. These include a provision imposing a 15 per cent. limit on individual shareholdings.

SCOTLAND

Arson

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the report on arson made to him by St. Ventigerns Academy, Blackburn, he will consider a policy of residential janitors at major isolated educational sites.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Arrangements for the security of schools are matters for the education authorities in the light of local circumstances.

Non-fossil Renewables

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made for instituting a non-fossil renewables obligation in the Scottish electricity supply industry; what duration it will have; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: None. The hon. Member is, however, referred to the parliamentary answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 15 May 1991, at columns 208-9.

River Catchment Management

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has, in the light of the recommendations of the report of the Salmon Advisory Committee on factors affecting natural smolt production, to review and strengthen the structure of river catchment management in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 June 1991]: Comments on the report are being invited from a wide range of interests. The responses will be taken into account in our policies for the fisheries, water quality and ecology of river catchments in Scotland.

Salmon

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the tonnage of illegal Atlantic salmon in the EC market from Norway; how many prosecutions have taken place; what action is being taken to prevent further illegalities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Norwegian Government to discuss the salmon industry; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps are being taken to monitor the impact of non-EC member countries exporting salmon to the EC market; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what plans he has to introduce a tariff on Norwegian salmon entering the EC market; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what steps have been taken to secure fair trading practices in the EC market regarding salmon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 June 1991]: In March this year, the European Commission closed its investigation of an anti-dumping case raised by the Scottish and Irish salmon producers. It did so on the basis of certain assurances from the Norwegian authorities aimed at stabilising the market for farmed salmon, including continuation of the Norwegian programme for freezing surplus production and for more rigorous enforcement of Norwegian regulations on salmon sales. The Commission also agreed to put in place arrangements for monitoring more closely imports of salmon to the European Community.

Representatives of the Scottish Salmon Growers Association, with officials of the fisheries Departments, have since met the Commission to discuss allegations of breaches of these undertakings and the continued import of salmon at below the Norwegian buying-in price. The Scottish and Irish industries are collecting detailed evidence to support these claims, and officials of the fisheries Departments expect to discuss the implications with the Commission as soon as that evidence is submitted.

The Commission is also expected to announce shortly, after consultation with the industry and member states, its measures to improve the collection of information on salmon imports by customs authorites of member states. This should provide a firmer basis for monitoring the EC market for salmon. At present, it is not possible to estimate the amounts of Norwegian salmon entering the EC market at prices below those set by the Norwegian authorities for buying-in surplus production.

ENERGY

Hydrocarbon-related Research

2. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives he is taking to promote the United Kingdom's programme of hydrocarbon-related research.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department gives financial help to the offshore supplies industry for research and development in five key areas of technology. These are sub-sea production systems, advanced underwater engineering, drilling and production, exploration technology and reservoir technology.

Together with the Natural Environment Research Council, the Department has recently launched a Link programme in hydrocarbon reservoirs. My Department also sponsors a programme of research into enhanced oil recovery, in collaboration with the oil industry.

Continental Shelf

7. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of direct employment on the United Kingdom continental shelf (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1990.

Mr. Moynihan: Direct employment increased by 65 per cent. to reach a new record level of 36,500 in 1990 compared with only 22,000 in 1980, the earliest year for which comparable figures are available.

26. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many development projects were approved on the United Kingdom continental shelf in 1990; and what was the level of investment associated with them.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1990, 18 development projects were approved worth some £4·8 billion at 1990 prices.

Electricity (Disconnections)

17. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest figures he has for the level of disconnection for debt for electricity supply.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Disconnections for non-payment of bills in England and Wales are at the lowest figure since records began in 1976, when disconnections stood at more than double the present figures.

In the year ended 31 March the total number of such disconnections stood at 51,637 or 0·27 per cent. of all domestic credit customers.

Gas Pricing

19. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress the Director General of OFGAS has reported to him in adjusting the tariff for horticultural customers following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into gas pricing.

Mr. Moynihan: Industrial gas prices are set by British Gas in competition with other fuels and subject to normal competition law. Under its published price schedules British Gas is not permitted to discriminate against—or in favour of—any class of user.

27. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the Director General of OFGAS to discuss the mechanism for setting price levels for British Gas customers.

Mr. Wakeham: I regularly meet the Director General of Ofgas and discuss a range of matters of mutual interest.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

20. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report on the progress of the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Initial experience in operating the scheme has confirmed that it meets a real need and is being well received. But it has also shown that to benefit customers and energy efficiency, work must be closely monitored and controlled to maintain a high standard.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the (a) grants and (b) advice given to public sector householders in the parliamentary constituency of Southwark and Bermondsey by the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Such an analysis of grants paid could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Where other work is undertaken under the scheme, grants of up to £10 are available for the provision of basic energy advice covering such matters as the effective use off heating controls, avoidance of condensation, and practical ways in which the public can save energy.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any further plans for the insulation of buildings in order to conserve energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The energy efficiency office is continuing to undertake a variety of programmes to promote energy efficiency in buildings, some of which were referred to in "This Common Inheritance".

These include:

- the home energy efficiency scheme, which provides grants to low income householders for basic insulation measures;
- a new domestic campaign, with the Department of the Environment, to explain the link between energy use and its effect on the environment and to promote energy efficiency in the home;
- the best practice programme, which provides authoritative and impartial advice and information to building professionals and managers;
- promotion of energy efficiency in Government buildings, with the objective of reducing energy consumption by 15 per cent. over five years;
- a campaign, with the Department of Health, to achieve 15 per cent. savings over five years in the national health service in England;
- seminars with the Department of the Environment to promote energy efficiency to chief executives and leaders of local authorities;
- seminars, with the Department of Education and Esso, for head teachers and governors of schools.

Solar Power

21. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives the Government are taking to promote research into the use of solar power generation.

Mr. Moynihan: On 8 May I announced that the Government is to fund a £250,000 programme of research into the use of solar power for electricity production.

Coal Privatisation

22. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Energy Consumption

23. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the average annual increase in energy consumption in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Wakeham: Between 1979 and 1990, the United Kingdom's gross domestic product increased by 24 per cent. During this period energy consumption on a heat supplied basis declined by 3·6 per cent. or 0·3 per cent. a year. This combination represents a substantial and welcome improvement in energy efficiency over the period.

Combined Heat and Power

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives the Government are undertaking to promote the increased use of combined heat and power.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department's energy efficiency office promotes combined heat and power primarily through its best practice programme which provides targeted, independent advice to key participants in the energy market.

Nuclear Energy (Employees)

25. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the number of people employed in Britain's nuclear energy industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) earlier today.

Coal Productivity

28. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much British Coal's productivity increased between (a) 1974 and 1979, (b) 1980 and 1984 and (c) 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Between 1973-74 and 1978-79 British Coal's productivity increased by 4·2 per cent., between 1979-80 and 1983-84 it increased by 5·2 per cent., and between 1984-85 and 1989-90 the increase was 107·7 per cent.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Wakeham: Details of appointments for which I have been responsible are contained in the annual publication "Public Bodies", and "Women into Public Appointments". Both publications are available in the Library of the House. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 14 May 1991 at col. 87. Further details on the trading bodies for which I am responsible are contained in their annual reports and accounts.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has no hospitality fund. However, expenditure on official hospitality in the years in question was as follows:

[1]1991-92	3,000

[1] To date.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what approaches he has made to the European Commission concerning the application of favourable treatment for a renewables tranche within the non-fossil fuel obligation beyond 1998.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. However, I am confident that the regional electricity companies have the flexibilities they need to be able to offer generators acceptable contracts under the proposed 1991 Renewables Order.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much his Department spent on advice on electricity privatisation in 1990-91; whether that sum includes the cost of the share information office; and if he will give details of any other expenditure incurred in 1990-91 in pursuit of electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: Final figures for 1990-91 will be published in the Appropriation Account later this year. It is estimated that the Department spent £52·1 million on advice on electricity privatisation in 1990-91, an amount which does not include the cost of the share information office, and a further £204·4 million on other expenses, principally the setting up and operation of the receiving banks, the design, printing and distribution of the prospectuses together with various fees and commissions, marketing costs and stamp duty.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those companies still advising him on electricity privatisation, giving the topics on which they are advising him and the expected end date of their contracts.

Mr. Wakeham: The provision of advice remains necessary in a limited number of areas and in connection with the remaining elements of the sales, for example the instalment arrangements; the relevant contracts will be terminated at the appropriate time. The information relating to the contractors and topics concerned is:

Adviser	Topic

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the actions taken by the Government to increase opencast coal mining.

Mr. Wakeham: We have taken no action intended to increase opencast coal mining. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) gave to the question from the hon. Member for Monmouth (Mr. Edwards) today.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on the future level of opencast mining activity.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no Government target for opencast coal output. The future level of opencast mining activity will be determined by market demand and the acceptability to the planning authorities of proposals for new sites.

HEALTH

Health Authority Supplies

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he issues to health authorities about their policy on paying suppliers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will review payment policy by health authorities to ensure suppliers are paid promptly and within the terms of their credit agreements.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service management executive has emphasised the need to pay suppliers within an acceptable period of time. It has sent a copy of the Department of Employment booklet, "Prompt Payment Please", a copy of which is available in the Library, to all English health authorities and has the expectation that health authorities will meet their obligations within a reasonable period of time in accordance with contractual requirements and responsible practice.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about late payment by health authorities to their suppliers, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In the last year we have received around a dozen letters concerning late payment from hon. Members and members of the public.

Childminders

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those local authorities which have waiting periods of six to 12 months, 12 to 18 months, 18 to 24 months, and over 24 months for registration of childminders;

(2) what information is available on the average time being taken by local authority social services departments to approve registration of childminders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Guidance issued in April by the Department* in connection with the Children Act 1989, which comes into force on 14 October, advises that local authorities should ensure that decisions on applications for registration by childminders are normally reached within three months of receipt of the application.

*The Children Act 1989 Guidance and Regulations Volume 2 Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority and by year for the last 10 years the number of cases of hepatitis B that have been diagnosed in the age groups (a) up to five years of age, (b) six to 15 years, (c) 16 to 30 years, (d) 31 to 60 years and (e) over 60 years; and if he will show in his answer what percentage this is of the population for each age group.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not readily available in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table shows reports of acute hepatitis B to the Public Health Laboratory Service's communicable disease surveillance centre for the years 1980 to 1990 inclusive by English health regions, and in the age groupings sought, as far as is possible. Comparison with populations would not produce a true incidence of hepatitis B because some cases are confirmed in laboratories outside the regions in which they occur. The number of reports of acute hepatitis B to the CDSC declined from 1,889 in 1984 to 526 in 1990.

Aids

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been commissioned by his Department into the incidence of or potential for occupational morbidity amongst professional health care staff involved in the care and treatment of people with HIV and AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No studies have been commissioned by the Department. However, since 1986 the communicable disease surveillance centre has been undertaking, through voluntary reporting, surveillance of accidental injuries in which health care workers are exposed to the blood or body fluids of patients who are infected with HIV. Additionally, routine surveillance of AIDS cases and laboratory reports of positive HIV antibody test include reported mode of transmission.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the full-time and part-time public apointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years, together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for a number of full and part-time public appointments. Details of each of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However information is available from the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" and "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations". Copies are available in the Library.

Trachoma Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, and by year for the last 10 years, the number of cases of trachoma that have been diagnosed in the age groups (a) up to five years of age, (b) six to 15 years, (c) 16 to 30 years, (d) 30 to 60 years and (e) over 60 years; and if he will show in his answer what percentage this is of the population for each age group.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the number of cases of trachoma diagnosed each year is not held centrally. Approximately 10 cases a year are treated as in-patients in NHS hospitals in England.

Source: Hospital In-Patient Enquiry 1979-1985

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the national health service trusts that have submitted acceptable business plans to his Department; and if he will show in his answer (a) the date they were received and, (b) the date they were agreed as acceptable.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The business plans are not approved as being acceptable but form the basis of a continuing discussion between the national health service management executive and individual trusts. The business plans are modified and updated during the year to incorporate the results of these discussions and to reflect changing circumstances.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which documents produced by the applicants for self-governing status for the Guy's and Lewisham trust he (a) commented on in writing and (b) directed any alterations of, prior to 1 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Drugs and Pesticides

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions with the Board of Science of the British Medical Association on the collation of reports of suspicion of drugs or pesticide-presence to a central body within his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: Consideration is being given to the possibility of establishing a card system whereby GPs would report any adverse reactions attributed to exposure to pesticides. This could include poisoning from residues in food.

We are also considering supporting research into the possibility of a causal link between very small pesticide residues in food and specific cases of human ill-health. So far no such research has been devised.

The surveillance of food for pesticide residues is carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food with guidance from the Department on public health aspects.

Private Beds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey of 2 May, Official Report, column 275, on NHS and private beds, if he will now provide a full answer to the hon. Member's question.

Mr. Dorrell: I replied to the hon. Member on 13 June 1991.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis the £81 million made available to bring about a reduction in outstanding creditor levels was divided between regional health authorities; and how much was received by each regional health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The allocation made to regions was broadly pro rata to the total of their districts' estimated excess creditors at 31 March 1989. The amount allocated by region is as follows:

Region	Allocation £ million
Northern	1·2
Yorkshire	1·9
Trent	3·9
East Anglian	1·7
North West Thames	21·1
North East Thames	18·1
South East Thames	14·8

Registered Homes Act 1984

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what duties proprietors of homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 have to maintain and file accounts of income and expenditure for each resident.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Proprietors of residential care homes are required by regulations made under the Registered Homes Act 1984 to keep records of money and valuables deposited with them by residents, or received on their behalf. A record of the return of money or valuables and of the use made of them must also be kept.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names and occupations of the members of the panel of experts set up under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The list shows the names and occupations of members of the panel of experts, who are appointed by the Lord President of the Council, to enable registered homes tribunals to hear appeals under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: GPs should bring any apparent evidence of neglect or abuse of a resident to the attention of the registration authority.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is a procedure for the courts to inform a registration authority when a registered proprietor or member of staff of a home registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 is convicted of a criminal offence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the recently agreed arrangements for the disclosure of criminal records to registration authorities, if a police force becomes aware that the owner or manager of a home has acquired a conviction likely to be of interest to the registration authority, the force will pass that information on.

Doctor Diagnosis

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to establish the impact on confidence in doctor diagnosis by patients, and take-up of preventive screening and immunisation of public awareness of the introduction of financial reward to general practitioners in meeting targets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. We have seen nothing to suggest that awareness of the target payments scheme for cervical cytology and childhood immunisation has affected patient confidence in doctors' clinical diagnosis.

The scheme has been most successful in increasing uptake rates for these services, thereby helping to eliminate avoidable illness. GPs are to be congratulated on their efforts in this area.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of patients who were waiting (a) one to two years and (b) over two years for hospital treatment at 31 March 1991 and 31 March 1990 for the south-west Thames and south-east Thames regional authorities and for each of their London districts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 3 June 1991]: Information on numbers waiting for in-patient treatment as at March 1990 and at September 1990, the latest available information, is given in the table. Full details of waiting lists as at 31 March 1991 will not be available until September 1991.

In the 12 months to September 1990 the total number waiting more than a year for in-patient treatment fell by 6 per cent. in south-east Thames region and by 13 per cent. in south-west Thames region as a whole.

This information is on a "provider" basis and does not relate to the districts' resident population.

WALES

Dog Attacks

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the approximate cost to the national health service for treating dog-related attacks in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available centrally.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of changes in the method of covering doctors in respect of possible medical negligence claims on (a) the doctors in Wales, (b) their practice or unit, (c) their health authority or family practitioner authority and (d) on patients who might be affected.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The changes in arrangements for covering the costs of medical negligence litigation to which the hon. Gentleman refers relate only to doctors working in the hospital and community health services (H and CHS). General medical practitioners continue to be responsible for arranging their own insurance cover via the medical defence organisations (MDOs).

The new arrangements should have no effect upon doctors in the hospital and community health services since the insurance premia which were previously paid on their behalf were paid for by their employer authorities. We are currently collecting data for the first year of these new arrangements in order to assess the effect upon health authorities. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when this is available.

There is no reason why patients should be affected.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the level of fees paid to medical experts in respect of evidence provided for medical negligence claims; and what assistance is available from within the national health service for anyone making or contemplating such a claim in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The fees paid to medical experts in respect of evidence provided in medical negligence cases reflect the amount and complexity of the work done and the amount of time which is involved. Typical fees that have been paid for expert reports range from £50 to £195 while experts who have attended Court to give evidence have recently charged between £50 and £600 per day. These figures are based on a random sample of current files.

A patient who is contemplating making a claim on the grounds of medical negligence may seek advice at an early stage from a community health council but if he wishes to pursue a claim it is usually essential that he should then have his own independent legal advice in view of the adversarial nature of the procedure.

Where a patient shows that he is likely to pursue a claim, it is the policy of the health authorities to disclose medical records voluntarily. To this extent they assist the patient as he is not then obliged to institute proceedings before he can gain access to his medical records. Finally, where a patient pursues a claim, he will rely upon the evidence of medical experts who in all probability are employed within the NHS.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what compensation was paid out to patients in each health authority area in Wales in each of the last five years (a) as a result of court action regarding allegations of medical negligence and (b) through payments made prior to a case coming to court; and what was the total financial cost to each authority in each of those years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the financial cost falling on each health authority in Wales in each of the last five years in respect of medical negligence claims was paid out in (a) defence legal costs, (b) legal costs awarded to patients or complainants, (c) fees in respect of medical evidence for complainants and (d) awards to successful patients or complainants.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has undertaken with health authorities and family practitioner authorities in Wales and with organisations representing medical practitioners in hospitals and in general practice regarding the present system for dealing with claims for compensation to patients or their families; what advice he was offered; and what options for improving the situation he is now considering.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The present arrangements were discussed with district health authorities in Wales in advance of implementation. General practitioners continue to be responsible for arranging their own cover via the medical defence organisations.

The Government believe that the best way to improve the compensation system is to streamline and simplify litigation procedures. We are presently considering the feasibility of an arbitration scheme within the NHS to resolve claims for medical negligence more simply and more quickly.

Guardians ad Litem

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names, and, if they are employed, the employment of all the present members of the guardians ad litem and reporting officers panels in the local authority areas of (i) Dyfed and (ii) West Glamorgan.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

Housing Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what policy considerations governed the choice of Aldbourne Associates for the main housing consultancy contract referred in his parliamentary replies of 23 May, Official Report, column 571, and 6 June, Official Report, column 311;

(2) pursuant to his parliamentary replies of 23 May, Official Report, column 511, and 6 June, Official Report, column 311, how Aldbourne Associates Ltd. was chosen for the housing consultancy contract.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The decision was taken by reference to relevant experience and expertise, the housing management consultancy pool then available, and the expected needs of the priority estates project programme in Wales.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority concerning the costs and benefits of its new staff booklet entitled "Total Quality/Making it Even Better"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We have had no specific consultations concerning the costs and benefits of South Glamorgan's total quality strategy. However the authority's strategy is in line with the all-Wales quality strategy, "A Quality Health Service for Wales".

My right hon. Friend was pleased to endorse South Glamorgan's strategy by saying,

"I want the process of creating a better NHS, aiming for even higher standards of care and serving all its patients efficiently, to begin now."

Health Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on the basis of financial allocations to health authorities for 1991-92, how much extra (a) West Glamorgan, (b) Clwyd, (c) Gwent, (d) Gwynedd and (e) Pembrokeshire would have received if they were allocated their full formula share.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: On the basis of the allocations announced in the Official Report on 21 March at columns 178-79, the increase would be as follows if the health authorities were funded in line with their weighted capitation formula shares.

	£ million
West Glamorgan	2·200
Clwyd	5·664
Gwent	1·996
Gwynedd	5·374
Pembrokeshire	0·840

Note: These figures have been calculated by redistributing revenue resources exclusive of capital charges in line with revenue formula shares. Capital charges were then added back in (according to authorities' liability as purchasers to meet the cost of capital charges in contracts in 1991-92) in the same way as in the actual 1991-92 allocations.

Weighted capitation will however be phased in over a period of years, being completed by 1998-99, in order to allow authorities time to adjust to their prospective capitation shares.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), Official Report, 21 March, columns 178-79, taking actual financial allocations for 1991-92 as the base, what for the published table would be the financial change in revenue resources for each health authority in each year to 2000-01; what these figures would be without capital charges added back in; and how, without capital charges added back in, would they relate to 1990-91 base figures.

Mr. David Hunt: The effect of the annual change in revenue resources shown in the table in my reply is as follows:

Revenue allocations of 1991-92 prices £000s

I should emphasise again that these are provided for planning purposes only and assume a 0·5 per cent. per annum real terms growth in line with the resource planning assumption previously issued to DHAs.

The table includes capital charges. In 1991-92 capital charges have been allocated to authorities, as purchasers, in line with their need to pay capital charges as part of the cost of obtaining services. From next year capital charges will be redistributed as part of the total revenue resource in the move towards reaching formula shares, and no distinction has therefore been made in the table between revenue and capital charges other than to exclude capital charges from the base from which the 0·5 per cent. growth was calculated. To exclude capital charges as asked would therefore be misleading.

Any comparison of the 1991-92 and subsequent allocations (with or without capital charges included) would be inappropriate as in 1990-91 authorities were funded as the providers of services—whereas from 1991-92 they (and GP fund holders) will be funded as purchasers of services.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the £143·6 million capital charges are attributable to each of the district health authorities; and whether this sum is included in the figure of £1,719 million given in the Official Report, 29 April, column 3.

Mr. David Hunt: The following table shows the breakdown of estimated capital charges by the district health authorities in which the units and hospitals to which the charges are attributable are located.

District health authority	Capital charges (£ million)
Clwyd	15·177
East Dyfed	18·664
Gwent	19·581
Gwynedd	9·789
Mid Glamorgan	25·204
Pembrokeshire	3·076
Powys	4·199
South Glamorgan	26·850
West Glamorgan	20·725
Total	143·265

Note
The figure of £143·265 million reflects revision to the estimates following the original estimate of £143·582 million.

Capital charges are payable to the Department by hospitals and units in respect of the assets they manage. The cost of capital charges is recovered in the charges made for the services they provide to purchasers—health authorities and GP fund holders. Health authorities and GP fund holders are funded to pay the extra cost of capital charges—over and above the other costs of services—by the Department recycling the receipts from capital charges to them. To maintain neutrality this year capital charge receipts have been recycled to purchasers in line with the extra costs. In future receipts will be recycled in line with revenue formula shares, encouraging authorities to purchase services from hospitals that use their capital efficiently and so are able to offer a higher level of patient services than less efficient providers.

The introduction of capital charging has no overall effect on public expenditure. The £143·265 million shown in the table has been deducted from provider units and reallocated to purchasers as described above. Account has been taken of the net cross border flows with England, and Welsh purchasers have additionally been funded for the capital charges, as well as the other costs of obtaining services in England. The adjustment for these cross-boundary flows was not included in my reply.

Health Service Consultants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 506, how many new consultants have been appointed overall to work at the three treatment centres since they became operational.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A total of 4·5 whole-time equivalent consultants have been appointed as a result of the establishment of the three treatment centres.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what local newspapers he proposes to advertise the Cardiff Bay Barrage hybrid Bill.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 14 June 1991]: At present I propose to advertise the Bill in the South Wales Echo and the Western Mail.

EMPLOYMENT

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not readily available and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost.

Public bodies sponsored by the Employment Department are listed in Cabinet Office's publication "Public Bodies 1990". Details of public appointments made by this department are given in the Women's National Commission's "A Handbook for Women's Organisations". Both publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of job vacancies at job centres in the Tooting constituency on 1 June.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matter in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Employment Service (Performance Targets)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the performance targets for the Employment Service last year; and what they are for the current year.

Mr. Jackson: The performance targets for the Employment Service are set out in the annual performance agreement. Copies of the 1990-91 and 1991-92 agreements are available to Members in the Library of the House.

Maternity Pay

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 622, whether the estimate quoted for implementing the pay provisions of the protection of pregnant women at work draft directive excluded or included the current statutory maternity payments; and on what assumptions the figure is based.

Mr. Forth: The estimate excludes the current statutory maternity payments, which stand at approximately £400 million a year. The main assumptions underlying the gross estimate of the cost of implementing the draft directive are that 370,000 employees become pregnant each year and that their average weekly earnings are £177 a week.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) men and (b) women registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth on 1 June.

Mr. Jackson: On the latest unemployment count date of 9 May 1991 there were 9,295 male and 3,584 female unemployed claimants in the London borough of Wandsworth on the unadjusted basis.

Schools Career Service

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the steps he intends to take to improve further the schools career service.

Mr. Jackson: The White Paper, "Education and Training for the 21st Century" (CM 1536), announces plans for the future of the careers service to enhance the quality of careers education and guidance. These plans include the provision of additional money to support further in-service training for careers service staff, and the extension of careers libraries and computerised information for schools and colleges.

EC Initiatives

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what consultation has taken place with prospective applicant bodies in the preparation of the United Kingdom operational programme for the now initiative; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultation has taken place with prospective applicant bodies in the preparation of the United Kingdom operational programme for the horizon programme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consultation has taken place with prospective applicant bodies in the preparation of the United Kingdom operational programme for the Euroform initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Formal consultation will begin shortly. The European Commission supplied the relevant financial information only in mid-April, four months after the initiative was announced. The Commission has therefore extended its original 30 June deadline for the submission by the member states of the required operational programme.

Employment Service

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he proposes to announce any future decisions to set aside performance targets for the Employment Service agency.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to set aside any of the performance targets which he agreed with the chief executive of the Employment Service. Should circumstances arise which caused him to do so he would inform the House and lodge an appropriate amendment to the ES annual performance agreement in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Civilian Contracts

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian contracts have been undertaken by the Royal Navy, with respect to Millbury docks in Plymouth, and the Army, with respect to the transportation of heavy gear from Penzance to St. Mary's for an island runway project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service periodically undertakes work at Millbay docks, Plymouth at the specific request of Associated British Ports. The Army has undertaken one commitment on repayment for the transportation of heavy gear from Penzance to St. Mary's.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he has given to the armed forces with regard to bidding for civilian contracts.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are standing instructions governing the scope of repayment activity and the basis on which it may be conducted. These reflect the principle that the public sector should not, as a general rule, take on activities which can equally well or better be undertaken by the private sector. Under the new management strategy budget holders are encouraged to increase their receipts, for example by making use of temporary spare capacity, within the framework of current policy on repayment activity.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian contracts the British Army has submitted in each of the last five years: how many such contracts have been awarded to the Army; if he will list each such awarded contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not MOD policy to seek such business.

Gulf Trust

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 226, if he will specify which benevolent funds have received money from the Gulf trust; how much has been allocated to each; and if any advice or suggestions have been offered to these organisations about ways of distributing the money.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Donations to the Gulf Trust are being passed to the three service benevolent funds—The King George's Fund for Sailors, the Army Benevolent Fund and the RAF Benevolent Fund. They will use this money to meet cases of need arising from the Gulf conflict in accordance with their established practices, and within the terms of their trust deeds and charity law.

William Douglas-Home

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given by his Department into the case and court-martial of William Douglas-Home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The hon. William Douglas-Home's case has been considered by the Department and a decision communicated to him.

Royal Artillery

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the relocation of the Royal Artillery from Woolwich; and when he expects to announce a decision.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A comprehensive review of the Army's training base is being undertaken as part of the work on "Options for Change." No decisions have yet been taken on the future of units at Woolwich. Announcements will be made as soon as possible.

HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on whether to go ahead with a programme to replace HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) on 20 May at column 391 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed).

Fiji

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military aid and assistance has been given to Fiji since the military coup.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some two to three Fijian officers attend military training courses in the United Kingdom each year. Surplus exercise stores, stockpiled in Fiji prior to 1987, were gifted to the Fijian armed forces in 1989. In addition, the Royal Navy officer has provided a loan service officer to the Fiji hydrographic unit for some 11 years.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of keeping HMS Endurance on station in the south Atlantic for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The costs of keeping HMS Endurance on station in the south Atlantic are not kept separately, but form part of her annual running costs. For these, I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 15 March to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Mr. Sayeed) at columns 718-19.

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consult his Canadian counterpart about the circumstances which led to the injuries suffered in July 1989 by Guardsmen Sean Povey, Adrian Hicks and John Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is continuing contact with the Canadian authorities. If any additional information on the case is required it can be obtained through normal channels.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters to date have been received by his Department from the solicitors acting for Guardsmen Sean Povey, Adrian Hicks and John Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date my Department has received nine letters from the solicitors previously acting on behalf of the guardsmen and two from their current solicitors.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances his Department would be willing to reconsider the decision not to pay any compensation to Guardsmen Sean Povey, Adrian Hicks and John Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The decision will be reconsidered if it can be shown that the Ministry of Defence is legally liable.

Mr. Hicks is in receipt of tax-free, index-linked pensions and other benefits amounting to £8,984 per annum. Guardsmen Povey and Ray will also be eligible for pensions and benefits if they are discharged from the Army on medical grounds.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if would be willing to meet Guardsmen Sean Povey, Adrian Hicks and John Ray, together with their hon. Members of Parliament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Secretary of State for Defence has no plans to do so.

Maritime Exercises

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes are being made to the scale, timing, location and scenario of major maritime exercises as a result of changes in the perceived threat to United Kingdom security interests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future scope, scale and frequency of major maritime exercises are currently under review in the light of the changed security situation in Europe.

Type 2075 Sonar

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the contract with Ferranti-Thomson for development of the type 2075 sonar.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Royal Navy's sonar requirements are being rationalised in line with the "Options for Change" decisions on the size and structure of the future submarine fleet. Against this background, I have decided not to proceed with the development of Sonar 2075, which had been intended for a future buy of Upholder class submarines, and the contract with Ferranti Thomson Sonar Systems Ltd. was terminated from 20 May 1991. The company have, however, successfully tendered for the competitive project definition phase for Sonar 2076 which is intended to form the basis of future submarine sonar programmes.

HMS Upholder

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long he expects HMS Upholder to be placed in dock for rectification of weapon handling system defects; and what is the expected cost of the rectification work.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We plan to start the rectification work on HMS Upholder later this year and complete it in 1992. The cost of the work has not yet been established, as we are currently evaluating tenders. In any case, it is not our practice to disclose commercially confidential information of this nature.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the deployment of HMS Endurance in the south Atlantic after her present tour of duty is over.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future programme of Endurance is under consideration, but no decisions have yet been taken.

Central TV (Libel Action)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what public funds or other assistance is being given to Messrs. MacKenzie Geidt and de Normann in their libel action against Central Television.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Prevailing Winds

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table to show for the last three years the number of days in each month when winds in Northern Ireland blew from the south-west to the north-west points of the compass.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is a matter for the Meteorological Office, under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive of the Meteorological office, Dr. J. T. Houghton, to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Lorry Action Areas

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lorry action areas have been established in line with recommendation 50 of the Armitage report; and at what cost.

Mr. Chope: None. Since the Armitage report was published there have been substantial improvements. Today's lorries are quieter, and safer and emit less smoke. There are also fewer of them in urban areas, due to the continuing improvement of the road network, particularly by provision of bypasses. A major focus of attention has been the Department's lorry management scheme which produced guidance last year illustrating the range of measures available to local authorities in promoting effective lorry management and reducing the adverse effects of lorries on local communities.

M6 (Litter)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often each year the M6 in Warwickshire is cleared of litter; and when was the last time.

Mr. Chope: Warwickshire county council, which acts as the Department's agent on this stretch of the M6, is responsible for clearing the motorway of litter as often as is required to maintain the standards laid down in the code of practice under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The frequency of clearance in any location will therefore depend on particular circumstances.

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not held centrally.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Expenditure on official hospitality by the Department is as follows:

1989-90	114,016
1990-91	144,023
[1]1991-92	22,040

[1] To date.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. McLoughlin: The majority of these appointments for each of the last five years are listed in the annual editions of "Public Bodies" published by the HMSO or "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations" produced by the Women's National Commission, copies of which are in the Library of the House. The appointments which are not listed in these documents are:

Acting Conservator of the River Mersey (£7,667 per annum)
Four Delegates to the Central Rhine Commission (unpaid)
Chairman and six Members of the Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Driving and Diabetes (unpaid)
Chairman and five Members of the Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Driving and Cardiovascular Disorders (unpaid)
Chairman and eight Members of the Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Driving and Disorders of the Nervous System (unpaid) and Chairman and two Members of that Panel's Sub-Committee on Mental Health/Drug and Alcohol Misuse

The further information sought by the hon. Member could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Rail Carriages

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the British Rail board will announce its decision on the tenders it has received for class 165 electrical multiple unit four-car sets for the class 341 carriages and the 471 carriages.

Mr. Rifkind: This is a matter for the British Railways Board. However, I understand that 180 class 165 and 59 class 165/2 diesel vehicles are on order for the Network SouthEast lines into Paddington and Marylebone. The first of these vehicles will enter regular service in October. It is not envisaged that any further orders for class 165 vehicles will be placed in the near future. No tenders have yet been invited for class 341 or class 471 electric multiple units.

M6 (Thornbridge Viaduct)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the nature of the current repair works to the Thornbridge viaduct of the M6 motorway in Birmingham; and how long the work will last.

Mr. Chope: Two contracts are currently under way for the installation of cathodic protection systems on the viaduct substructure. The first, involving work to crossbeams between Beeches road and Thornbridge avenue should be completed by mid July. This is slightly later than previously anticipated because of the need for unforeseen additional works. A second similar contract south of Thornbridge avenue commenced in April and is due to finish next March.

A13 (Roadworks)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the outline timetable for roadworks on the East India Dock road/Canning Town bridge and flyover on the A13 and its junctions with Leamouth and Abbot roads; if he will publish maps or diagrams of the proposed phases of the works; and what steps are being taken to ensure that maximum traffic flows consistent with safety of pedestrians are maintained.

Mr. Chope: The Department's consultants are finalising their recommendations for this scheme which would involve the widening of Ironbridge and the Canning Town flyover. The intention is to hold a public exhibition later this summer in the Mayflower centre, Newham, at which the proposals will be on display allowing comments from all interested parties. This will be followed by the announcement of a preferred scheme, leading to the publication of draft orders under the Highways Act next year. Construction is currently programmed to commence in 1994. The contract will include requirements about maintenance of traffic flows and provision of safe crossing points for pedestrians during construction.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a date for the implementation of the Draft Regulation of April 1990 on the orange badge scheme for disabled drivers.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 21 March at column 212.

Research and Development

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 625, if he will list the projects of research and data collection on the environmental implications of transport policy decisions (i) currently under way and (ii) commissioned or published since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department makes use of a wide range of data sources to inform transport policy decisions with environmental implications. The principal statistical series used are set out in annex B of the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance"—Cm. 1200. Many research projects involve the collection of data specific to the problem being studied.

The following list details projects in the Department's current research programme with a substantial environmental element. Information on research covering the whole of the Department's responsibilities commissioned or published since 1979 could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he can now name a date when the Severn bridge will become fully operational following completion of repairs and maintenance work.

Mr. Chope: The resurfacing work is due to be completed by November 1991. As with all structures, further works will be necessary from time to time.

Highway Code

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West on 22 April, if he will give special attention in his advertising to highlight important sections of the Highway Code;

(2) if he will take special action to advertise the information contained in paragraphs 50, 65, 105 and 108 of the Highway Code.

Mr. Chope: All the rules in the Highway Code contain important safety advice which road users should follow. In promoting the safety measures in the code, my Department will continue to stress the need for drivers of all vehicles to leave a safe gap for stopping, to give way to pedestrians at road junctions and to take care when making any manoeuvre at a road junction.

Bus Priority Schemes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what new proposals he has to promote the introduction of bus priority schemes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his most recent assessment of the value of bus priority schemes.

Mr. Freeman: Bus priority schemes have an important role to play in keeping buses moving in congested areas. It is for local authorities to introduce such measures. I have recently set up a working group, including representatives from the industry, local authorities and the police to consider ways to promote bus use. A sub-group is considering new guidance for local authorities to assist them in adopting appropriate schemes. We hope to be able to provide support for some bus priority measures in 1992-93 if suitable proposals are put forward by local authorities.

Traffic Signs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider the design of prohibiting traffic signs, to ensure a consistent pattern to avoid confusion between those carrying a diagonal red bar and those without a bar, particularly for those affecting cyclists.

Mr. Chope: There are no plans to change the design of prohibitory traffic signs. The red circle around a sign barring particular categories of road user indicates the prohibition. Red bars are used only on signs banning left, right or U-turns. This is consistent both internally in the United Kingdom and with the European convention on road signs and signals.

Railways (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning delays to parts of the West Yorkshire rail electrification scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Since the middle of May we have received four letters.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that all parts of the West Yorkshire rail electrification scheme proceed as a matter of urgency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Credit approvals have already been reserved for the infrastructure costs of this project, and we shall be considering resources for the rolling stock as a matter of urgency when decisions are taken on the allocation of credit approvals for 1992-93.

Maritime Safety

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the meeting of the maritime safety committee of the international maritime organisation to discuss the report of its specialist sub-committee on the stability of roll on/roll off ferries in May.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 June 1991]: One of the many subjects given detailed consideration by the maritime safety committee was the residual stability standards of existing roll on/roll off passenger ships. After two weeks discussion the committee agreed that:

(a) the standard of residual stability applicable to new passenger ships should be applied to existing roll on/roll off passenger ships;

(b) the implementation of that standard should be phased-in, dealing first with those ships having the lowest standard of survivability and that the starting date of the first phase should be October 1994;

(c) the length of the phasing-in period would depend to a significant extent on the results of calculations undertaken to determine the survivability standards of individual ships but it should not exceed 5 years.

Final decisions on the phasing-in period and the adoption of an amendment to the convention will be made by the committee in April 1992, after considering the further advice requested from the specialist stability sub-committee.

Trinity House Mast, Alnwick

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he was notified by Trinity House in advance that it was its intention to notify Alnwick district council that it proposed to erect a Loran C mast at Amble as a permitted development which did not currently enjoy permitted development status.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 June 1991]: My right hon. and learned Friend was aware that Trinity House intended to consult Alnwick district council, as the local planning authority, and others about the proposal to erect a Loran C transmitter mast near Amble as a permitted development in advance of its having powers to carry the proposal forward in that manner. This was on the basis that Trinity House would acquire these powers on the Government's signature of an international agreement on a Loran C system in north-west Europe. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering urgently whether to proceed with such an agreement following the receipt of a revised offer from Racal Electronics plc for the automation and operation of the Decca Navigator chains in the United Kingdom into the next century.

Air misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer 3 May, Official Report, columns 360-62, to the hon. Member for Don Valley, what was (a) the height, (b) risk category and (c) the findings of the joint air miss working group for any incidents that were reported and which were above 5,000 ft.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman, with other details to identify the incident, is as follows:

Incident number	Date	Risk	Aircraft	Aircraft	Latitude	Longditude	Altitude (ft)
81/230	25 November 1981	C	Friendship F27	F4/Phantom	5342N	00006W	12,000
82/189	8 December 1982	C	Model 727	One-Eleven (BAC)	5342N	00011E	35,700
89/042	24 April 1989	A	Jet Provost	Jet Provost	5340N	00023W	06,000
90/131	31 July 1990	C	Super King Air 200	Super Jet 747	5344N	00001W	27,000

The findings of the Joint Airmiss Working Group were as follows:

81/230 Unauthorised entry into Airway B1 by the Phantom.

82/189 Prescribed horizontal separation not maintained by air traffic control.

89/042 Very late sighting by the pilots of both Jet Provosts.

90/131 Prescribed separation not maintained by air traffic control.

Risk Category A (incident 89/042) denotes an actual risk of collision. Category C (incidents 81/230, 82/189 and 90/131) denotes no risk of collision.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer on 3 May, Official Report, columns 360-62, to the hon. Member for Don Valley, about air misses, what was (a) the height, (b) the risk category and (c) the findings of the joint air miss working group for the incidents on (i) 28 April 1988, (ii) 21 June 1988 and (iii) 16 February 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman is as follows:

Date of incident	Height (ft)	Risk category	Findings of joint airmiss working group
28 April 1988	3,000	C	No risk of collision. Both pilots fulfilled their lookout responsibility.
21 June 1988	1,500	C	Sighting report without risk.
16 February 1990	2,000	C	The Buccaneer pilot flew close enough to the Sikorsky S76 to cause concern. However, there was no risk of collision, and the Buccaneer pilot underook his responsibility to avoid collision.

Note: Category C is the lowest category, and denotes that there was no risk of collision.

M56

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the reasons why the M56 has worn out and needs to be comprehensively relaid at its junction with the M53.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Because the amount of traffic using it—now 68,000 vehicles every day, with 20 per cent. of them heavy goods vehicles—proved to be far higher than forecast when the motorway was designed in the 1970s. The road surface is being replaced to new higher standards.

Totton Western Bypass

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the public inquiry into the side road and compulsory purchase orders in relation to the A326 Totton Western bypass stage 3 is now complete; and when he expects to announce his decisions.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 June 1991]: The public inquiry into these orders is complete and the inspector's report is currently being considered by my Department as a matter of priority. I hope that it will be possible to announce a decision before the end of July.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases are currently under consideration by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, broken down by year of application.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

The number of applications under consideration at the end of May 1991 was 58,834. A further 10,876 cases were awaiting the applicant's response to an award offer, and 11,324 were awaiting decision on appeal.

The board does not record the age of applications in the form requested, but the percentages of cases resolved within certain periods from the date of registration are shown in the board's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Assaults on Police Officers

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average sentence for assaults on police officers in each of the last five years for each constabulary; and what consideration he has given as to the adequacy of the range of sentences available;

(2) how many assaults on police officers have resulted in successful prosecutions in each of the last five years for each constabulary.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics on court proceedings for violence against the person do not distinguish the occupation of the victim. We are planning to carry out a survey of the sentences given for assaults against police officers later this year. We shall consider in the light of the results whether any further action is needed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been assaulted in the course of their duty in each of the last five years, for each constabulary.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is for 1990 and is given in the table.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of people from each Caribbean country not permitted to enter the United Kingdom, for each year since 1979; and what percentage this represents in each case of the known number of entrants from each country.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the following table:

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) applied to enter the United Kingdom as visitors from Caribbean countries and (b) were refused entry in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information for 1986 to 1989 is published in table 1 of the annual Home Office Command Papers "Control of Immigration Statistics, United Kingdom"—Cm 166, 415, 726 and 1124 for each year from 1986 to 1989 respectively—copies of which are in the Library. The available information for 1990 is given in the table.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exemptions have been granted to the requirements in section 10(3) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in each year since 1987; and if he will list the suppliers of non-purpose bred animals in each case.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 7 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, which required the designation of breeding and supplying establishments, came into effect on 1 January 1990. A number of exemptions were granted at that time to project licence holders to obtain animals from non-designated sources until animals from designated sources became available. Many of these have now lapsed because of the subsequent increase in availability of purpose bred animals. The remaining exemptions are principally for those types of primate and dog which are not available from designated breeders. No statistical information is held centrally about the granting of exemptions, which is done on a case-by-case basis.

It is not our practice to publish the names of suppliers of animals for use in scientific procedures.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether papers relating to scientific procedures on animals performed by Professor Wilhelm Feldberg while not holding a valid project licence in respect of those procedures are to be submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions for consideration of a prosecution under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are currently considering a number of documents received on 16 April from the Medical Research Council together with further correspondence received yesterday.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are currently taken by the Home Office inspectorate to ensure that experimentation using non-purpose bred animals does not contravene the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The controls applied by the inspectorate to the use in scientific procedures of animals obtained from non-designated sources are exactly the same as the controls which are applied to the use of animals obtained from designated sources.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to stop the supply of non-purpose bred animals for experimentation.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 14 June 1991]: No. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 provides that the most commonly used laboratory species, mice, rats, guinea pigs, hamsters, rabbits, together with dogs, cats and non-human primates may be used in scientific procedures only if they have been bred at a designated breeding establishment or obtained from a designated supplying establishment. However, exemptions to this requirement may be granted under section 10(3). Exemptions to obtain animals from non-designated sources are rare. All requests for exemptions are carefully examined. For less commonly used species there may well be no alternative other than to obtain them from non-designated sources.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for political asylum were outstanding for people giving as an address any residence in the constituencies of (a) Tottenham and (b) Hornsey and Wood Green as at (i) 31 December 1988, (ii) 31 December 1989 and (iii) 31 December 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Rule 43 Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women on rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 1 June.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Rape

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what details about the ethnic background of rapists and their victims are collected by his Department; and whether he will publish the most up to date facts and figures available to him.

Mrs. Rumbold: Neither victim details nor ethnic origin of defendants are recorded in the national criminal statistics system. Information on a sample of offenders from six prisons and their victims was given on pages 15-17 and 54 of "The imprisoned rapist and rape" by D. Grubin and J. Gunn, published by the Home Office on 4 March 1991, a copy of which is in the Library. The latest readily available information about offenders serving custodial sentences for rape is published in table 1.12 of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1989"—Cm. 1221—a copy of which is in the Library.

Wild Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responsibilities his Department has for (a) conservation, (b) transport and (c) the welfare of imported wild birds.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Home Office has responsibility for general legislation relating to the welfare of domestic, captive and performing animals and to pet shops. In addition, scientific work concerned with conservation, the development of veterinary techniques and the prevention and treatment of disease is conducted under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Offenders

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the latest available figures for the total number and percentage of detected offenders in England and Wales broken down by (a) gender, (b) race, (c) type of offence and (d) age; and what are the peak ages for known offenders for (i) males and (ii) females, respectively;

(2) what are the latest available figures and percentages for people sentenced by the courts for indictable offences broken down by (a) gender, (b) ethnic background and (c) age;

(3) what are the latest available figures and percentages for the total numbers of people receiving non-custodial sentences broken down by (a) type of sentence, (b) gender and (c) ethnic background;

(4) what are the latest available figures and percentages for the total numbers of people cautioned for summary and indictable offences broken down by (a) gender, (b) age, (c) ethnic minority origin and (d) type of offence.

Mr. John Patten: In England and Wales in 1989 the peak age of offending for males was 16 to 18 years and for females 15 years, respectively. The other information requested, excluding data on race and ethnic background which is not collected centrally, is published in the Command Paper "Criminal statistics England and Wales 1989", tables 5.2, 5.12, 7.4 and 7.6 to 7.13, a copy of which is in the Library. Data for 1990 are not yet available.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available figures and percentages for the total numbers of people receiving custodial sentences broken down by (a) type of sentence, (b) gender and (c) ethnic background.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not recorded centrally. The readily available information is given in the table.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide statistics on the total number of prisoners between the years 1978 to 1990 broken down by (a) gender, (b) ethnic background and (c) type of offence; and of these how many had (i) no previous convictions, (ii) one conviction and (iii) two or more convictions.

Mrs. Rumbold: An extensive analysis of the ethnic origins of prisoners was published in "The ethnic origins of prisoners: the prison population on 30 June 1985 and persons received July 1984 March 1985". This included analyses by previous convictions and type of offence, table 13. A copy of the statistical bulletin 17/86 is available in the Library. Information on the sentenced population on 30 June analysed by previous convictions, sex and type of offence has been published annually from 1982 onwards in "Prison statistics England and Wales"—tables 3.5, 4.2 and 5.2 of the latest volume, for 1989, Cm. 122—and by ethnic origin and type of offence since 1985—table 1.12—copies of which are in the Library. Information for 1985 and 1990 on previous convictions and ethnic origin is given in the table.

Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost and the information by ethnic origin is not available for years before 1985.

Police Service

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available figures for (i) the total numbers of people employed in the police service broken down by (a) occupation, (b) grade, (c) gender and (d) ethnic background, (ii) the percentage increase of women employed in the service between 1978 and the latest available figures broken down by occupation and grade and (iii) the percentage increase of ethnic minorities employed in the service between 1978 and the latest available figures broken down by occupation and grade.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The percentage increase in the number of women police officers between 1978 and February 1991 was 71·6 per cent. The percentage increase in the ethnic minority representation in the police service between 1985, when records were first kept, and February 1991 was 92·5 per cent. The tables show what is available from central records. To provide figures by occupation, by rank and gender, could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Shotguns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing for each constabulary in England and Wales (a) the number of shotgun certificates held, (b) the number granted, (c) the number renewed, (d) the number of shotguns surrendered or handed over to the police, (e) the number of certificates cancelled by the police and (f) the number of certificates not renewed and of the guns covered by them handed over to the police in each of the last four years; and what became of any shotguns handed in.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information, relating to England and Wales, is published annually in Home Office statistical bulletins as follows: "Statistics on the Operation of the Firearms Act 1968", issue 2/88, issue 33/88, and issue 18/89, for the years 1986 to 1988 and "Statistics on the operations of the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988", issue 26/90, for 1989. Home office statistical bulletins are held in the Library.

These bulletins contain the information by police force area on the number of shotgun certificates on issue at 31 December each year, the number of new certificates granted, the number renewed and the number revoked during these years. For revocations in 1986, some limited information is given for England and Wales as a whole in paragraph 6 of bulletin issue 2/88.

Statistics on the number of certificates not renewed and on the number of disposal of shotguns surrendered or handed over to the police are not available.

In 1989, the Home Office published guidance to the police urging them not to destroy a shotgun of an unusual type if it was of interest to a museum or the government's forensic science laboratories.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under which provisions of the Firearms Acts or other provisions, chief constables are empowered to require persons seeking the grant or renewal of a shotgun certificate to give details of the shoots the applicant attended during the preceding 12 months, and as to whether the shoots were organised or otherwise.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under section 28 of the Firearms Act 1968, as amended by section 3 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988, a chief officer of police may refuse to grant or renew a shotgun certificate if he is satisfied that the applicant does not have a good reason for possessing, purchasing or acquiring a shotgun. The Act does not specify the inquiries that a chief officer may make when considering the good reason requirement, but where a chief officer has genuine doubts about an applicant's reasons for possessing a shotgun it is for him to make such inquiries as he reasonably considers necessary.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list such information he has as to which police forces in England and Wales require applicants for the grant or renewal of a shotgun certificate to give details of (a) the shoots the applicant attended during the preceding 12 months and (b) the lands over which they have shot during the preceding 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988 the administration of the firearms licensing system is a matter entirely for local chief officers of police. To help to ensure consistency of practice where appropriate the Home Office published "Firearms Law: Guidance to the Police" in 1989. A copy was placed in the Library. The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dog Attacks

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the compilations of statistics on dog attacks on humans to make them nationwide and more detailed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall continue to monitor nationally criminal offences under the appropriate legislation including the new offences created by the Dangerous Dogs Bill. No central records are kept of those attacks by dogs which do not lead to criminal proceedings, except in the context of an annual sample survey of home and leisure accidents involving dogs.

Prisoners

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East of 13 June, at column 624, if he will make a statement on the progress of the review.

Mrs. Rumbold: The review is under way and the results should be available by the autumn.

Wakefield Prison

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the projected staffing levels agreed under "fresh start" for Her Majesty's prison Wakefield for 18 June; what is the actual staffing figure for the same date; and what are the reasons for any difference.

Mrs. Rumbold: The present target staffing level for prison officers at Wakefield, including principal and senior officers and specialists, is 462. There are currently 462 officers at Wakefield, 10 of whom are on detached duty from other establishments.

Televisions (Hospitals)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many times hospitals have been visited by television detector teams; and if he will list the hospitals;

(2) how many television licences are held by patients in hospitals in the United Kingdom; and if he will list the hospitals and number of licences held by patients in each hospital showing separately the figures for the national health service and private hospitals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Broadcasting Act 1990 responsibility for issuing TV licences and enforcing the licensing requirement was transferred to the BBC with effect from 1 April 1991. It also now controls the TV licensing records. Such questions therefore fall to be answered by the BBC.

Police (Malpractice)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) former and (b) serving officers of the Metropolitan police are currently under investigation but not charged, following complaints of alleged malpractice in the course of criminal investigations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures are not collected in a form that enables the information requested to be readily obtained, and it can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Voluntary Repatriation

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of the revised agreement with the International Social Service of the United Kingdom to continue operating the Government's voluntary repatriation scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: A small scheme providing financial assistance in certain circumstances from public funds for non-British citizens settled in this country who wish to return permanently overseas to a non-European country has been administered since 1971 on behalf of the Government by International Social Service (UK), under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971.

I have placed in the Library a copy of the recently revised agreement with International Social Service (UK), together with an information sheet on the scheme. Some minor changes have been made to an earlier 1984 agreement, to update and refine the scheme's criteria and procedures.

Charing Cross and Westminster Medical School

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits by Home Office inspectors were made to the laboratories of Charing Cross and Westminster medical school within the last year.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 14 June 1991]: During the past 12 months the establishment has been visited by the inspectorate on five occasions involving 15 visits to departments with the establishment.

National Identification Bureau

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the number of subject access requests under the Data Protection Act 1984 which have been dealt with by the National Identification Bureau, by police force area, for the years 1988, 1989 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 11 June 1991]: The information requested is as follows.

PRIME MINISTER

Sign Language

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the recommendation of the EEC resolution of June 1988 to give official recognition to British sign language for the deaf.

The Prime Minister: The Government have noted the terms of the resolution on sign languages for deaf people adopted by the European Parliament in June 1988. We fully recognise the right of deaf people to use their preferred method of communication, including British sign language and have grant aided a variety of organisations concerned with the promotion and development of sign languages and other communication techniques.

Cruise Missiles

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the departure to the United States of America of the last flight of Cruise missiles and the de-activation of 501 missile wing USAF at Greenham common.

The Prime Minister: The departure of the last cruise missiles from RAF Greenham Common on 5 March and the deactivation of the 501st Tactical Missile Wing on 4 June mark an important milestone in the implementation of the INF treaty. As well as making a vital contribution to the NATO alliance, the 501st Tactical Missile Wing has been a valuable presence in this country and welcome neighbours to the people of Newbury. The United States presence in Newbury will continue at a reduced level with the base returning to standby status.

Kurdish People

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West, of 25 April, Official Report, column 520; if he will now consider establishing safe havens in southern Iraq.

The Prime Minister: We remain very concerned by the situation of refugees in southern Iraq. We believe the best way forward is to continue our support for the work of the United Nations, including the establishment of a humanitarian centre in Basra and the expansion of relief efforts in the area. We welcome the Secretary General's decision to send a high-level fact finding mission to the south to assess humanitarian needs.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister when he will answer the letters on behalf of the organisation British Aid for the Kurds of 17 April and 11 June sent to him by Mrs. Judith P. Stubbs of Culthorpe, Chesterfield.

The Prime Minister: The letter sent in April by Mrs. Stubbs was among the 3,500 letters about Iraq and kind offers of help for the Kurds received by my office at that time. These were sent as appropriate to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration to take forward.

The ODA has been in frequent contact with British Aid for Kurds since April to offer advice on the changing types of aid that would be most useful to the Kurds as the situation developed. The ODA chartered two Iran Air flights which carried over 90 tonnes of aid collected by British Aid for the Kurds. A reply to Mrs. Stubbs's latest letter will be sent shortly.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1991]: We welcome any new initiative that will promote greater unity in the leadership of the game and help football raise the necessary funds to implement Lord Justice Taylor's recommendations and thereby improve standards of safety and comfort for spectators. My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport has had discussions with the Professional Footballers Association, the Football Association, the Football League and representatives of the supporters' associations to hear their various proposals for the future of the game. He has not indicated a view on any of them other than to welcome them as a contribution to the debate. He has made it clear that decisions are for football alone to take.

Birmingham Olympiad

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to meet the president of the International Olympic Committee during the Olympiad in Birmingham; what functions the Government intend to host during that event; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1991]: I have not yet had the opportunity of meeting the president of the International Olympic Committee. However, the Minister for Sport was present at the opening of the 97th congress of the IOC in Birmingham and had discussions with the president, other senior officials and members of the IOC. Some £2 million was spent in 1990-91 and we expect to spend £5 to £6 million in 1991-92. For details of the projects on which money has been spent, I refer my hon. WALES

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what formula has been used to determine the element within standard spending assessment for local authorities in Wales for the costs of implementing the Children Act 1989 in the current financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The formulae for calculating authorities' standard spending assessment in 1991-92 are set out in the Welsh Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (No. 2) approved by Parliament on 29 January 1991.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications of the impending changes in the legal aid system in respect of the working practices and financial commitments of (a) health authorities in Wales, (b) his Department and (c) patients in Wales in regard to situations where individuals believe they have suffered through medical negligence.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None of the proposals for change in the legal aid provisions about which the Lord Chancellor is consulting should affect working practices in health authorities or in the Department. The effect, if at all, which any changes may have on financial commitments is very difficult to assess with any degree of accuracy since the incidence of medical negligence is so variable. Nevertheless, it is our view that where people suffer loss or damage resulting from negligence they must be adequately compensated. The proposals for widening the scope of the legal aid provisions to those who may be currently ineligible are to be welcomed and will enhance the ability of patients to seek redress where previously financial considerations may have militated against commencing action.

Road Construction

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when work will start on the proposed new road near the Dinas Arms hotel, Lowerton, Fishguard, Dyfed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A scheme to widen part of the A487 by the Dinas Arms hotel and a further proposal for a local diversion are under consideration, but a decision on whether to proceed has yet to be taken.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not collected centrally.

Ministerial Travel Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give total expenditure on hire and use of helicopters for official Ministerial travel in each of the past five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure on helicopter hire and use is not disaggregated from other costs.

Grants, Neath

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide details of public grants and moneys made available in the Neath constituency for each year since 1979 for existing and new enterprises; how many enterprises were involved; and what was the number of jobs affected.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the form requested.

(2) how many people from the borough of Ogmore were employed in training agencies and how many were engaged in full-time courses on 1 February 1991 in local TECs; how many people are now so employed; and what is the change in the number of full-time training places since February 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available.

Mr. David Hunt: In April 1990 the unadjusted unemployment total for the Ogmore constituency stood at 2,281. In April 1991 the figure was 3,132.

Cancer

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will sponsor an urgent independent investigation into the incidence of cancer, by type, by location and by age group of the sufferer, in the counties of Gwynedd and Dyfed.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer Thursday 6 June]: The Welsh Office is, of course, aware of the long-known higher than average incidence of cancer in North Wales, as well as the below-average incidence in Dyfed. Preliminary analysis of data for the period 1984-86 shortly to be published by the Wales Cancer Registry confirms that the pattern has not changed significantly since 1983.

In 1987 the Department commissioned Professor Hubert Campbell to undertake an investigation into cancer rates along the North Wales coast for the period 1974-83. The report was published in July 1988 and concluded that though there was an excess of 5 per cent. in cancer registrations over the whole period on the North Wales coast when compared with the whole of Wales, this pattern was the same as that known to affect North Wales many years ago. I see no reason for the Welsh Office to commission an independent investigation of the incidence of each type of cancer in Gwynedd and Dyfed at this time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy towards the complete removal of land-based short-range nuclear weapons at the forthcoming negotiations on these weapons; and when these negotiations will begin.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: NATO has agreed on the need to maintain nuclear forces based in Europe and kept up to date where necessary. Work is continuing within the alliance with a view to significant reductions in short-range nuclear forces in Europe.

British Embassy, Paris

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the programme for the internal and external re-decoration of the British embassy in Paris in the next 12 months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The principal internal and external redecoration/refurbishment works programmed for the embassy at Paris in the next 12 months are as follows:

1. Residence:
   - (a) Redecoration of State Dining Room
   - (b) Redecoration and refurbishment of a guest bedroom
   - (c) Repair and refurbishment of entrance gates
   - (d) Repair and renewal of gallery to rear garden

2. Chancery:
   - (a) Redecoration and restoration of Minister's office and Chancery conference room
   - (b) Uplift of Chancery Information Department
   - (c) Renewal of Chancery roof.

Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the application of the Republic of Korea and of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to join the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support membership of the United Nations for all the people of Korea. North Korea's recent announcement that it intends to apply to join the United Nations is a positive step towards breaking the impasse on this question between the two Koreas.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights situation in South Korea at the most recent date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We believe that the Republic of Korea's human rights record has substantially improved since President Roh took office in February 1988.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Minister for Trade of the Republic of Korea to discuss trade policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will discuss a range of trade issues with Dr. Lee Bong-suh during his visit to Britain this week. British companies are keen to trade with Korea, but there are problems, particularly over free and fair access to Korean markets. Exporters of consumer goods are faced with a wide range of hindrances, including high and discriminatory fiscal barriers. This applies particularly to Scotch whisky. Foreign securities houses applying for licences are subject to excessive capital requirements and Korea has not granted the Community's request for similar intellectual property protection to that given to the United States.

We understand from the Commission that when Vice-President Andriessen visited Korea recently, President Roh expressed to him the firm conviction that a solution would soon be found to the intellectual property problem. We shall remain in close touch with the Commission about the need to ensure that the Koreans live up to this. We also hope that there will be rapid progress in the other areas outlined.

South Atlantic

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government undertake to maintain a visible demonstration of United Kingdom sovereignty and presence in the South Atlantic.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government's administration of its South Atlantic dependent territories and the British Antarctic Territory is backed by Her Majesty's forces, including military garrisons on the Falkland Islands and South Georgia, and a presence on Ascension Island, together with naval patrols in the area.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on any discussions he has had with the United States Government on the question of the Vietnamese boat people.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the press release of 5 June entitled "Vietnamese asylum seekers," copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to ease the flow of Vietnamese boat people into Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The best way to stem the flow of Vietnamese asylum seekers is to convince them that if screened out, they stand no chance of resettlement and will be returned to Vietnam whether they wish to go or not. To this end, we are pursuing urgently the possible creation of an internationally managed centre in Vietnam to which non-refugees who do not volunteer could be returned, pending their reintegration into their local communities.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people are expected to be in Hong Kong by the end of 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is impossible to predict this figure for 1991.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people have entered Hong Kong so far this year; and how many during 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1990, a total of 6,599 Vietnamese migrants arrived in Hong Kong. As of 14 June, there have been 10,786 arrivals this year.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people are now in Hong Kong; and where they are being kept.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 14 June 1991 there were 59,504 Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong. Those awaiting screening or screened out as non-refugees are housed in 10 detention centres while those granted refugee status are accommodated in three open centres.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has made to the Government of Vietnam to seek a solution to the problem of the Vietnamese boat people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following United States-United Kingdom-Hong Kong consultations in Washington on 3-4 June, we have sought discussions, as a matter of urgency, with the Government of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam on the establishment of an internationally managed centre in the territory provided by Vietnam for those asylum seekers who are determined not to be refugees and have not taken advantage of the existing voluntary return programmes. We await a reply.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what written statements or similar record of Vietnamese boat people's experiences on their journeys are recorded on arrival by UNHCR officals or Hong Kong Government officials.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Hong Kong immigration department asks Vietnamese migrants on their arrival in Hong Kong a range of questions including details of their point and date of departures and any en-route stopovers.

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy towards lowering the range and payload criteria for ballistic missiles under the terms of the missile technology control regime; what consideration he has given to the transfer of any items from category I to category II of that regime; and what is his policy towards establishing confidence and security building measures as a means of strengthening the regime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The missile technology control regime parameters were established to combat the proliferation of delivery systems for nuclear weapons. We would need to look carefully at any proposal to change those parameters. We and our partners in the missile technology regime keep the equipment and technology annexe under constant review. We are also seeking to strengthen the regime through expanded membership and enhanced and harmonised implementation.

Kuwait

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Kuwaiti Government arising from the continuing prosecution of those alleged to have collaborated with the Iraqi invasion of that country and, in particular, juveniles under the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have repeatedly stressed to the Kuwaiti authorities our hope that trials of detainees of war crimes or collaboration will follow due processes of law and respect the fundamental human rights of the defendants.

A 12-year-old boy detained at a juvenile detention centre accused of stealing was mistakenly brought before the martial law court on 5 June but released by the judge into the custody of his guardian without charge. We understand that there are no other juveniles in detention who will be brought before the martial law court: under Kuwait law no one under 15 years old can be prosecuted in an adult court.

Southern Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West of 25 April, Official Report, column 521-22, if he will now consider what steps can be taken to assist the Shias and other people under threat in southern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain very concerned by the situation of refugees in southern Iraq. We have supported the United Nations in its efforts to establish a humanitarian centre in Basra and to expand its operations in the area. We welcome the decision of the Secretary-General to send a high-level fact-finding mission to assess humanitarian requirements.

Gibraltar

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent complaints he has received about the conduct of Spanish officials at the border with Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We receive periodic complaints about delays to traffic at the border between Spain and Gibraltar. We are, of course, also aware of the Gibraltar Government's concerns about this. We are in regular contact with the Spanish authorities about the problem.

Northern Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the ability of the administration now controlling most of northern Somalia to achieve stability and peace in that part of the country.

Mrs. Chalker: It is hard to make a reliable independent assessment of the situation on the ground in northern Somalia. It appears that the Somali National Movement is in control of most of the area, but there have been reports of fighting in the east.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones) gave to the Falkland Islands Council about the continued deployment of HMS Endurance when he recently visited the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement on his current position on this.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I understand from my hon. Friend that this matter was not discussed when he met Falkland Islands councillors during his visit to the Falkland Islands in February.

Radioactivity, Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he is making to the findings of the International Atomic Energy Authority report on the extent and effects on the local population of release of radioactivity from Iraq's nuclear installations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that no such report has been issued by the IAEA.

Hong Kong

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many children and babies have been immunised by the free immunisation service in Hong Kong since the service was introduced.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The total number of persons immunised and the diseases covered since the service began in 1952 up to 1989-90 are as follows:

	Million
1952-1989
BCG (Anti-Tuberculosis)	3·99

1st dose	1·54
2nd dose	1·31
3rd dose	1·46
Booster	0·87
Total	5·38
1963-1989
Oral Polio
1st dose	2·79
2nd dose	2·59
Booster	2·72
Total	8·10
1966-1989
Polio (type 1)	1·72
1967-1989
Measles	1·39

Rubella	0·49
1985-1989
Hepatitis B	0·27
1990
MMR (Measles, Mumps and Rubella)	0·63

In 1990, the average coverage for BCG and polio were 99 per cent. and 91 per cent. respectively. Vaccinations against other diseases are well over 80 per cent.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 116-18 on the value of income support, if he will give the figures for columns D and E for the period on which each year's uprating was based.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table, although from 1974 only. The production of figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A Benefit uprating date	B Benefit rate	C Percentage increase in 'B'	D Earnings percentage increase	E RPI percentage increase

Notes:
Column B—shows the Supplementary Benefit basic single householder scale rate for the years 1974-87 excluding housing costs. These were paid through Supplementary Benefit until 1982-83 (not included in the scale rates) and then paid via Housing Benefit. From April 1988 the figures are the Income Support basic personal allowance for a single person over 25. No Supplementary Benefit additional requirements or Income Support premiums for special needs have been included.
Column C—shows the percentage increase from one uprating date to the next. This will not necessarily reflect the uprating index for that year because of rounding. Also in the earlier years uprating was calculated by forecasting likely changes in the RPI and this sometimes meant that adjustments had to be made the following year.
Column D—gives the percentage increase in the average gross weekly earnings of all adult males from the New Earnings Survey. This percentage is for the period on which each year's uprating was based.
Column E—shows the actual movement in the Retail Price Index for all items calculated for the period on which each year's uprating was based.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what level of basic income support would be provided currently to a single individual under 24 years of age who claims as a result of being refused unemployment benefit and has no other form of income.

Mr. Jack; For a claimant aged 18 or over, the level of basic income support would be £31·15, assuming the normal conditions of entitlement are satisfied.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in which newspapers and on what dates his Department's local offices in the Doncaster area advertised the availability of both qualifying conditions and application forms for special cold weather payments during the winter of 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: Advertisements showing the qualifying conditions and including an application form appeared in local newspapers as follows:

Doncaster Free Press (weekly)	14 February 1991
Doncaster Advertiser (weekly)	14 February 1991
Doncaster Star (daily)	12, 13, 14 February 1991
South Yorkshire Times (weekly)	22 February 1991

Benefits Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his practice to request the chief executive of the Benefits Agency when answering parliamentary questions transferred to him to send all replies under his signature rather than under those of his staff.

Miss Widdecombe: It is the chief executive's practice, whenever possible, to sign all such letters personally.

Advertising

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what budget his Department has for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines the services and responsibilities of his Department; and what amount of money has been spent on this publicity in each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: Although the departmental budget for national publicity does not contain a specific amount for publicity to ethnic minority groups, national publicity campaigns take fully into account the need to reach ethnic minorities. In the current year the Benefits Agency has a budget of £205,000 for publicity materials in ethnic minority languages. Expenditure in 1990-91 was £141,592 and in 1989-90 it was £127,239. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Armed Forces (Benefits)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to change the residency and presence conditions for entitlement to non-contributory benefits for members of the armed forces.

Mr. Scott: Special rules already exist to help serving members of the armed forces and their families to satisfy the presence tests for non-contributory disability benefits. On 7 March, my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Lord Henley, announced the Government's intention to extend these provisions to the residence condition for severe disablement allowance. We have no present plans to make any further changes.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 31 May.

Mr. Scott: On 31 May 1991, there were 1,355 such applications.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund inspectors were employed on 31 December 1990, 31 January, 28 February, 31 March, 30 April and 31 May.

Mr. Scott: The number of social fund inspectors employed between December 1990 and May 1991 is shown in the table. The figures in brackets denote the number of those who were in training on those dates. An exercise to recruit a further eight inspectors is in progress.

	Number
31 December 1990	39
31 January 1991	41 (4)
28 February 1991	39
31 March 1991	39
30 April 1991	46 (7)
31 May 1991	55 (8)

Appeals

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the returns from each local office requested in circular RD/Tech 5/91 showing the number of late appeals admitted and total arrears payable as a result of late appeals inspired by commissioners' decisions CIS/144/89 (Crompton) and CIS/372/90 (Foster).

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not yet available.

Student Support

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications he has received each year since 1988 for extra statutory support for students in full-time education; how many applications he has granted in each year; and what was the total cost in each year.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 June 1991]: No records, other than the number of payments made, is kept for extra-statutory payments. They indicate that none have been made to students over this period.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has carried out on the impact of the withdrawal of benefit to students has made on the total number of students in further and higher education in England and Wales.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

Student numbers in further and higher education are growing steadily. Provisional figures show a 10 per cent. increase in new enrolments in higher education in 1990-91 compared to 1989-90. Applications for places in 1991-92 are 8·1 per cent. higher than at the same time last year, suggesting a further increase in numbers. We intend periodically to monitor student income and expenditure. Questions about the withdrawal of benefits are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisoners

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are serving prison sentences at each prison; and how many of these persons at each prison are identified with (a) Presbyterian, (b) Church of Ireland, (c) Methodist, (d) Roman Catholic and (e) Free Presbyterian religions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information which is readily available is set out in the table:

	Belfast	Maze	Maghaberry	Magilligan	YOC
Presbyterian	82	41	50	59	30
Church of Ireland	106	52	80	72	43
Methodist (and others under Methodist pastoral care)	12	27	40	23	34

	Belfast	Maze	Maghaberry	Magilligan	YOC
Roman Catholic	216	328	130	145	73
Free Presbyterian	12	52	35	16	8
Total prison population (at 10 June 1991)	428	500	335	315	188

Countryside Preservation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what areas of South Down are now covered by areas of outstanding natural beauty and sites of special scientific interest; and what are the relevant figures for 1981.

Mr. Needham: In 1981 there were three areas of outstanding natural beauty—AONBs—in South Down designated under the Amenity Lands Act (Northern Ireland) 1965:—

Mourne AONB—approximately 46,000 hectares;
Lecale Coast AONB—approximately 3,000 hectares;
Strangford Lough AONB—approximately 19,000 hectares, only part of which falls within South Down.

In 1981 there were eight areas of scientific interest—ASIs—in South Down designated under the 1965 Act, but the category areas of special scientific interest—ASSIs—did not exist at that time.

The 1965 Act was repealed by the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 which introduced a new framework for the conservation of nature and the countryside. Under the 1985 order, the Mourne AONB has been reviewed and now measures 57,000 hectares approximately. The other two AONBs have not been reviewed.

The ASSI category was introduced by the 1985 Order; South Down contains part of two ASSIs:—

Strangford Lough (Part II) ASSI—approximately 700 hectares.
Strangford Lough (Part III) ASSI—approximately 1,900 hectares.

The ASI designations under the 1965 Act are still operative but they do not afford as much protection as ASSI declarations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Youth Service, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the level of provision for the youth service in Inner London since the abolition of the inner London education authority.

Mr. Atkins: The level of provision for education for all local authorities is made by standard spending assessment. It is entirely for individual local authorities to decide how to deploy the resources available to them, including provision for the youth service.

Special Schools

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the numbers of pupils attending special schools in inner London (a) on 1 April 1990 and (b) on 1 April 1991; what guidance he has given to local education authorities on the number of special school places which should be provided as a proportion of all school places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The number of pupils attending special schools in inner London in January 1990 was 6,095, the latest date for which information is available. No specific guidance has been issued to LEAs on the number of special school places they should provide: that is a matter for local decision.

Nuclear Structure Facility, Daresbury

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evaluation of the scientific quality of research at the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury was undertaken by the Science and Engineering Research Council prior to its decision to close the facility.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As part of its annual planning process, the Science and Engineering Research Council evaluates the relative priority of all its research programmes taking scientific quality into account. Following such an exercise earlier this year, the SERC decided that running the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury laboratory beyond 1992 was of lower priority than other parts of its programme.

School Entry (Appeal System)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all those types of secondary school or college catering for young people under the age of 16 years and funded in whole or part by public money, which are not required by law to have a system for appeal by pupils refused entry.

Mr. Fallon: There is no statutory obligation on city technology colleges to operate a system of appeals on admissions.

Physical Education

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the amount of time spent on physical education and sport in schools in (a) 1978, (b) 1984, (c) 1990 and (d) since the introduction of the national curriculum (i) nationally and (ii) broken down by county.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not collected by the Government.

Japan (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the purpose of his recent visit to Japan; what was the composition of his entourage; and if he will break down the costs of transport, accommodation, subsistence and other associated costs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The purpose of my visit was to see at first hand the strengths and weaknesses of the Japanese education system. I was accompanied by a departmental private secretary, a senior official of my department, and my Parliamentary Private Secretary. The breakdown of the costs of the visit are as follows:

—Transport to Japan and within Japan: £23,760.
—Accommodation and subsistence in the British Embassy and in hotels: £2,322.
—Other costs, including interpreters and telephone calls on official business: £3,659.

School Governors

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the latest information available to his Department about the number of school governors who have resigned during the last 12 months.

Mr. Fallon: The Department does not collect statistics on school governors. A sample survey conducted by the National Foundation for Educational Research last year indicated a 10 per cent. resignation rate in the 1989-90 school year.

Residential Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual expenditure on each of the long-term residential colleges supported by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: Grants to the long-term residential colleges for the academic year 1990-91 are as follows:

Co-operative College, Loughborough	96,000
Fircroft College, Birmingham	326,000
Hillcroft College, Surbiton	352,000
Northern College, Barnsley	66,000
Plater College, Oxford	337,000
Ruskin College, Oxford	839,000

Learning Difficulties

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the amount per child each authority allocates in local management of schools schemes for non-statemented children who have learning difficulties.

Mr. Fallon: Under schemes of local management, local authorities fund special needs in a variety of ways. Some of the resources are distributed as part of the base funding per pupil, while some are allocated by means of special factors which take into account the unevenness in the incidence of special needs across the authorities' schools. Accordingly it is not possible to identify the totality of the resources allocated in respect of special needs for pupils without statements.

Northumberland Schools

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent visits have been made by officials of his Department to first schools in Northumberland; and whether any advice has been given to the education authority about possible closures of these or other schools in the area.

Mr. Fallon: Officials of the Department visited a number of first schools in Northumberland on 9 and 10 May this year. The visit was made in response to a request from the local education authority for advice from the Department on how they might best deal with serious structural deficiencies present in some of their timber-framed schools.

Officials did not advise on the closure of individual schools. The decision to repair, replace or close structurally unsound timber-framed schools is one entirely for the Northumberland LEA in the first instance.

East Birmingham Task Force

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what visits or other engagements were undertaken by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science during his visit to the East Birmingham task force area on 3 September 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The programme contained visits to the multilingual job club, a joint venture between the East Birmingham task force and the Employment Service; the hotel and catering job shop; lunch at the Birmingham chamber of industry and commerce; and visits to two probation service projects—Community and Village Entertainment and a day activity centre.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what contribution was made by his Department and the East Birmingham task force to the cost of publication of the "Asian Business Handbook"; who organised the launch attended by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 23 April 1990; and who published the book.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The East Birmingham task force contributed £1,500 to the project. The launch was organised by Birmingham Venture, part of the Birmingham chamber of commerce. The handbook was published by the Institute of Asian Business.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future payment of debt charges by local authorities arising out of expenditure on further education colleges, and sixth-form colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In response to representations from local authorities, my right hon. Friend announced on 9 May that from April 1993 the Further Education Council will take responsibility for debt charges arising from capital projects which commence from 1 April 1991 and are approved by the Secretary of State. Since that announcement, the Department has received representations from 21 authorities, seeking clarification on the scope of the scheme. Officials will be writing to all local education authorities shortly with further details.

Colleges (Expenditure)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual expenditure by his Department on City Literary institute, Morley college, Mary Ward centre, Working Men's college, Cordwainers college, National Sea Training trust and College of the Sea.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In financial year 1990-91 the Department gave grants of £343,000 to the National Sea

Training trust and £85,000 to the College of the Sea. No annual expenditure is incurred by the DES on the City literary institute, Morley college, Mary Ward centre, Working Men's college and Cordwainers college. Cordwainers college is an assisted college maintained by Hackney local eduation authority. The City literary institute, Morley college, Mary Ward centre and Working Men's college are independent adult education institutions, formerly maintained by the inner London education authority, which receive grant from the London residuary body.

Special Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in rank order the amount spent by each local education authority on special needs.

Mr. Fallon: For 1988-89, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available from local education authorities' returns, their spending on special schools, home and hospital tuition, child guidance and educational psychological services was as shown in the table. These figures exclude expenditure to meet the special needs of pupils in primary and secondary schools, and of further education students, as information on this expenditure is not collected separately.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps have been taken by his officials to co-ordinate action in the civil service generally and for civil servants in the Export Credits Guarantee Department in particular to ensure that civil servants are encouraged to see the public service as a secure, worthwhile and challenging career.

Mr. Renton: Throughout the civil service, departments and agencies are being encouraged to decide how best to recruit, retain and motivate their staff. Departments and agencies are being given increasing flexibilities to enable them to do this in ways fitted to their own circumstances.

THE ARTS

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether sub-metering has been introduced in the buildings occupied by his Office to measure individual department's actual energy consumption.

Mr. Renton: No. My office shares accommodation with other departments and their energy consumption is estimated on the basis of the respective floor areas.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Housing

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish details of freehold residential properties transferred in 1989 and 1990 in the constituencies of Tottenham, Hornsey and Wood Green, showing in each case the number of transactions where the price was (a) less than £40,000, (b) between £40,000 and £100,000, (c) between £100,000 and £250,000 and (d) over £250,000.

Mr. Maples: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the increase in post-tax earnings, allowing for inflation, of each quintile of earners; and how many earners are in each band, since 1979, to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Maude: I regret that information on quintiles of earners is not readily available. The table shows earnings after tax and NIC for full-time male employees in Great Britain and assumes that no tax allowances or reliefs are available other than the personal allowance for a married man.

Earnings after tax and NIC at April 1990 prices

	April 1979 (£)	April 1990 (£)	Percentage increase
Lower quartile	133·8	153·6	15
Median	161·1	196·3	22
Upper quartile	195·8	255·3	30

In March 1979 there were 13·1 million male employees in employment, and in March 1990 there were 11·7 million.

Civil Service Pay Award

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his intention, in the event of disagreement, to send the civil service pay award to independent arbitration.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Independent arbitration is available under the terms of the long-term pay agreements between the Treasury and the unions representing non-industrial civil servants, but only if both parties agree to it.

The Government have recently rejected requests by the Civil and Public Servants Association and the National Union of Civil and Public Servants to refer offers made for this year's annual pay settlement to arbitration. The CPSA has since accepted the offer, and the NUCPS is recommending that their members to likewise.

Income Tax

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the basic rate of income tax would be increased to raise an additional half billion pound revenue.

Mr. Maude: At 1991-92 levels of income an increase of 0·25p in the basic rate of income tax would yield about half a billion pounds in a full year.

Mortgages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 20 June 1990, Official Report, column 558, on the average increase in repayments per week on the average mortgage in each region since June 1988.

Mr. Maude: Information for average new building mortgages in the second quarter of 1988 is in the table. Details of average amounts outstanding on all mortgages by region are not available.

Inland Revenue (Form P11D)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many extra posts have been provided in the Inland Revenue to deal with the outstanding P11D forms.

Mr. Maude: No extra posts that can be specifically identified were provided to clear the outstanding P11D forms; these were examined by existing staff, in part working overtime.

Insurance Industry

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the likely impact on the United Kingdom balance of payments up to the end of the decade as a result of liabilities incurred by the United Kingdom insurance industry in respect of pollution claims arising in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 14 June 1991]: As claims are still subject to judgments pending in United States courts it is not at present possible either to quantify the liabilities incurred by the United Kingdom insurers or to estimate the impact on the United Kingdom balance of payments.

ENERGY

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Wakeham: This information is not held centrally.

Gas and Electricity Bills

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to stagger the arrival of quarterly bills for gas and electricity, so that they do not arrive at the end of the same month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No. Payment arrangements are a commercial matter for the industries concerned within their statutory and other obligations. A variety of payment arrangements are available to customers.

Energy Management

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 11-12, whether the energy managers devote one third of a person year to energy management each or in total.

Mr. Wakeham: The energy managers in the premises occupied by my Department are estimated to devote around one third of a man year in total to energy management, consistent with the Audit Commission's recommendations that one man year of effort should be devoted to each £1 million spent on energy.

Coal Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the contract for advice on the privatisation of the coal industry was awarded to Touche Ross after (a) competitive tender and (b) open advertisement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The contract was awarded to Touche Ross after competitive tender but not open advertisement.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the provision made for (a) monitoring electricity privatisation costs and (b) costs associated with coal privatisation for 1991-92.

Mr. Wakeham: In each case, my Department has arrangements in place for monitoring such costs according to the standard principles of Government accounting and against central and departmental requirements relating to financial control and audit procedures.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott), of 14 December 1990, Official Report, column 535, if he will list for (a) Amersham International, (b) Britoil (primary sale), (c) Britoil (secondary sale), (d) Enterprise Oil, (e) Wytch Farm, (f) British Gas, (g) each of the regional electricity companies, (h) National Power and (i) PowerGen, (i) the net equity proceeds to Government, (ii) the market value at the end of the first day of trading and, where appropriate, (iii) the current market value.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is given in the table. Between the dates of the two market values given, the companies concerned may not have maintained a constant issued share capital.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the total costs incurred to date by his Department in the privatisation of (a) Amersham International, (b) Britoil, (c) Enterprise Oil, (d) Wytch Farm and (e) British Gas, breaking down each figure into (i) underwriting, (ii) selling and broking commissions, (iii) receiving bank costs, (iv) marketing, (v) advisers' fees and (vi) other costs, respectively.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested in respect of the privatisation of British Gas, Amersham International, Britoil and Enterprise Oil and the sale of the holding in Wytch Farm is not immediately available in the form requested. I will look into the position and provide as comprehensive a reply as possible bearing in mind the need not to incur disproportionate costs in indentifying the figures requested.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer to the Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) of 12 June, Official Report, column 563, if he will provide a breakdown of the £256·5 million spent on electricity privatisation in 1990-91 by type (a) underwriting costs, (b) selling and broking commissions, (c) receiving bank costs, (d) marketing costs, (e) advisers' fees and (f) other costs.

Mr. Wakeham: A breakdown of the £256·5 million previously reported is as follows:

Final figures for 1990-91 will be published in the appropriation account later this year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements he is making with the existing central training section of the Export Credits Guarantee Department based at Ty Glas road, Llanishen, Cardiff to provide a service to the continuing ECGD after privatisation of the Insurance Services Group.

Mr. Sainsbury: The invitation to tender for the Insurance Services Group includes a draft training agreement which provides for the supply of services to the Export Credits Guarantee Department by the information technology training section based at Llanishen. The terms of the eventual contract will be subject to negotiation with the preferred purchaser, but the draft agreement provides for a call-off contract. Information concerning the terms of sale will be made public after privatisation, which is subject to the successful passage of the Export and Investment Guarantees Bill through Parliament.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce the length of contract to be awarded by the continuing Export Credits Guarantee Department to the computer section of ECGD Insurance Services Group at Ty Glas road, Llanishen, Cardiff.

Mr. Sainsbury: The invitation to tender for the Insurance Services Group includes a number of different draft agreements for the continuing provision of information technology services to the Export Credits Guarantee Department. The terms of the eventual contracts will be subject to negotiation with the preferred purchaser, but the principal draft information technology agreements in the invitation to tender provide for a two-year contract. Information concerning the terms of the sale will be made public after privatisation, which is subject to the successful passage of the Export and Investment Guarantees Bill through Parliament.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultation he has had with the computer programme development section of the Export Credits Guarantee Department located at Ty Glas road, Llanishen, Cardiff, concerning the development of information technology systems for the continuing ECGD after the sale of the Insurance Services Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The invitation to tender for the Insurance Services Group includes draft development agreement which sets a framework for selecting, defining, and carrying out suitable information technology development work for the Export Credits Guarantee Department. The terms of the eventual contract will be subject to negotiation with the preferred purchaser, but the draft agreement provides for a two-year contract and thereafter individual projects continue until completed. Information concerning the terms of the sale will be made public after privatisation, which is subject to the successful passage of the Export and Investment Guarantees Bill through Parliament.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to announce the length of contract to be awarded for computer maintenance and servicing within the Export Credits Guarantee Department, London, to the Insurance Services Group computer support unit at Ty Glas road, Llanishen, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Computer maintenance and servicing within the Export Credits Guarantee Department, London, are not provided by computer staff in the Insurance Services Group, Cardiff, and there are no plans to introduce such a service. A service for maintenance of certain computer programs is currently provided by Insurance Services Group staff and the invitation to tender for the Insurance Services Group includes a draft maintenance and minor enhancement agreement. The terms of the eventual contract will be subject to negotiation with the preferred purchaser, but the draft agreement provides for a two-year contract and until terminated thereafter. Information concerning the terms of sale will be made public after privatisation, which is subject to the successful passage of the Export and Investment Guarantees Bill through Parliament.

Israel (Arab Boycott)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the documents he has published since January 1990 relating to the Arab boycott of Israel.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no DTI publications on the Arab boycott other than the guidance note for exporters to which I referred in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 11 June, Official Report, column 489.

Co-operatives and Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initial response he has made to the proposal for a European statute on co-operatives, mutuals and voluntary organisations; what consultations he intends to carry out on this proposal before it is adopted by the European Commission as a draft regulation; and what further steps he intends to take.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Commission has asked the Government for their views on a proposal for a European statute on co-operatives, mutuals and voluntary organisations. I welcome the fact that the Commission has consulted member states' Governments. After proper consideration, we shall make our views known to the Commission.

Price Indications Directive

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to implement the EC directive on price indications.

Mr. Leigh: I yesterday laid before the House the Price Marking Order 1991. The order will require traders to show clearly the selling price of goods which they sell to the private consumer. For some goods, mainly those sold from bulk or prepacked in variable quantities, they will also be required to show the unit price.

Traders will be allowed to show unit prices in imperial or in metric units. However, if they use metric units for food, they must also show the unit price in imperial units. They will generally be free to choose how they show their prices, provided that the consumer can readily identify the items to which particular prices apply. Thus, prices may be shown on the goods individually or on tickets, or by means of notice near to them.

Traders selling goods to the private consumer will have to show prices inclusive of VAT, but shops selling mainly to businesses may alternatively display prominent notices that their prices are subject to VAT.

The price shown for the goods must include, or state with equal prominence, the price of any further goods or services for which the consumer must also pay in order to obtain the goods in question.

The order also contains provisions which allow traders to display prominent notices giving information about general reductions rather than having to re-price goods individually.

Similarly, prominent notices may be used for a period of 14 days after any change in the rate of VAT to inform consumers of adjustments to marked prices.

The order will apply to advertisements in which retailers choose to include prices, and to mail order advertisements. It will not apply to manufacturers or other suppliers who do not sell goods directly to the consumer.

It will come into force on 1 September 1991. It will not apply to catalogues and some advertising material produced before 1 November 1991.

Shell Suits

Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what success he has had in persuading the European Commission to end the restrictive classification rules governing import quotas for clothing under which woven shell suits are treated as separate tops and bottoms even though they are designed, made, sold and intended to be worn together.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The United Kingdom and some other member states have argued that EC classification rules should allow shell suits to be treated as clothing ensembles. However we have not been successful in persuading the Commission and the majority of member states of this and separate classification and quota treatment is to be maintained.

Expo 92

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 10 June, Official Report, column 417, if he will give details of the single integrated theme that will be presented at the British pavilion at Expo 92 in Seville.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The single integrated theme of the British pavilion is "Original Britain", showing the very best of our technological, commercial and cultural achievements.

Inside the pavilion an exhibition, linking with the overall Expo 92 theme of "Discovery", has been created to demonstrate modern British discoveries, particularly in the fields of communication, exploration and harnessing the natural elements.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Animal Cruelty

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what efforts are made to ensure that products used in the House do not involve cruelty to animals in their production.

Mr. MacGregor: Wherever possible the Refreshment Department and other House authorities seek to avoid the use of products that are known to involve in their manufacture or preparation cruelty to animals or the putting in peril of endangered species.

Veal

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he has taken to exclude veal from the menu of restaurants and cafeterias in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 June 1991]: None. Veal forms a substantial proportion of the meat consumed in the dining rooms of the House.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department is responsible for the procedures leading to a large number of Crown, Privy Council and Lord President appointments, including visitors and members of governing bodies of universities and colleges, members of councils regulating the medical and paramedical professions, high sheriffs and inspectors of schools. The vast majority of these appointments are part-time and unpaid, while the salaries of inspectors of schools are a matter for the Department of Education and Science. Full details of all appointments made during the last five years could not be compiled except at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the expenditure covered by his Office's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his office during the financial year 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Megrim

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to improve the marketing of megrim caught within the British fishing limits.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter for the Sea Fish Industry Authority which operates schemes to promote the marketing of British-caught sea fish, including megrim, in both the United Kingdom and export markets.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Maclean: The final figure for expenditure in 1989-90 is £62,303. The provisional figure for expenditure in 1990-91 is £65,229. The figure for expenditure in 1991-92 to date is £7,598.

Pesticides

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the stocks of pesticides, prohibited under European Community and United Kingdom legislation, currently being held in Britain.

Mr. Maclean: In 1990 the British Agrochemicals Association—BAA—and the United Kingdom Agricultural Supply Trade Association—UKASTA—carried out a survey which suggested that there might be 1,000 to 2,000 tonnes of non-approved pesticides on farms in Great Britain. The BAA and UKASTA are developing, with support from Government Departments, a scheme to encourage farmers to dispose of these and other unwanted pesticides safely. We hope to launch the scheme jointly in the very near future.

Blue-eared Pig Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will re-consider his plans to close the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre, in the light of the suspected outbreak of blue-eared pig disease in the area.

Mr. Maclean: As blue-eared pig disease is now a notifiable disease the responsibility for action rests with the veterinary field service operating through the divisional veterinary officer. Suspected disease should be reported to divisional veterinary officers and the necessary on-farm investigations and inquiries are carried out by the divisional veterinary officers and their veterinary staff. Samples taken at these visits are sent to the central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge for examination.

The proposed closure of the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre will not, therefore, affect the situation in the Humberside area.

Stocking Levels

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the stocking levels for cattle, sheep and pigs for each region within Great Britain; and what stocking density per hectare this represents for cattle and sheep.

Mr. Maclean: Information on stocking levels is given in the table; data are taken from the June 1990 agricultural census, and therefore cover all main holdings in the annual census. Information on stocking density is not readily available but grazing area has been shown in the final column of the table.

Whaling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to discuss the results of the International Whaling Commission conference with ministers from Iceland, Norway and Japan.

Mr. Maclean: The Governments of Iceland, Norway and Japan are well aware of our policy on whaling and we shall continue to use appropriate opportunities to raise the issue with them.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the one-year set-aside scheme recently agreed by the EC Council of Ministers.

Mr. Gummer: The scheme will be available to producers who set aside at least 15 per cent. of their 1991 arable area for 1991-92 and also reduce their cereals area by 15 per cent. in that period. Participants will receive a payment of £121·20 per hectare set-aside—£109·20 per hectare in the less-favoured areas—or £91·20 per hectare —£79·20 per hectare in the LFAs—where areas of more than 100 hectares and more than 75 per cent. of arable area are set aside. Those who sell grain between 1 July 1991 and 30 June 1992 and have co-responsibility levy deducted will be entitled to refund of this levy at the rate of £6·70½ p per tonne. Detailed rules are still being finalised.

Farmers setting land aside under this scheme will be required to plant a green cover. In other respects, land set aside will be subject to similar environmental conditions as the existing five year set-aside scheme.

Producers wishing to participate in the scheme will be required to register details of their arable cropping in the year 1990-91. Registration forms will be available from local divisional offices by the end of this month and those wishing to register in England and Wales should contact divisional offices for copies: in Scotland and Northern Ireland producers should contact their local area offices or county agricultural offices respectively where forms will be available. Registration forms must be completed and returned no later than 31 July. Registration will not commit producers to apply for the one-year scheme.

Producers who do not register will not be eligible for the one-year scheme.

Producers who register for the one-year scheme will be contacted by the agriculture Departments and given fuller details, including application forms, as soon as these are available.

Participants in the existing five-year scheme will receive partial refund of the co-responsibility levy paid between the dates mentioned above. This will be at the rate of £2·68 per tonne, the equivalent of 2 per cent. co-responsibility levy, subject to final agreement in Brussels on the method of calculation.

ENVIRONMENT

Dogs

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the fee that would be charged for a dog registration scheme in order to cover its costs.

Mr. Trippier: We have no intention of introducing a dog registration scheme and have therefore not made any independent cost estimate of this nature.

Noise

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the draft codes of practice for minimising noise currently being considered by his Department for approval under section 71 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974; when he intends to approve these codes of practice; and whether he intends to consult on any further codes of practice.

Mr. Trippier: The Department is currently involved in work relating to four draft codes of practice which are at various stages of advancement. These are:

(i) Code of practice on noise from clay pigeon shooting. This has been drawn up by the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association. Complex technical issues have arisen and it has been necessary to carry out two consultation exercises. It is anticipated that the results of the latest consultation exercise will be discussed with the CPSA when these have been fully analysed.

(ii) Code of practice on noise from audible birdscarers. The department set up a working party which included representatives from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the National Farmers Union, the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and the Building Research Establishment. There have been two consultation exercises and the results of the later one have yet to be analysed in order to determine what further work may be necessary.

(iii) Code of practice on noise from off-road motorcycle sport. A consortium comprising members from the Noise Council, the National Society for Clean Air and Environmental Protection and representatives from the motorcycle manufacturers and user groups have recently drawn up a draft which has been discussed with officials. The consortium is to carry out a consultation exercise shortly.

(iv) Code of practice on noise control at open air pop concerts. A Noise Council working party recently submitted a draft to the Department for initial comments and officials are to meet with them in July to discuss it. There will be consultation.

In its report the noise review working party recommended that codes of practice be used as a means of controlling environmental noise and that work should proceed as quickly as possible on the above codes. The Government have undertaken to complete work on codes under discussion. This we will do as soon as our work in responding to the recommendations of the noise review working party will allow.

We will consider the case for further codes if a need arises. There would be consultation on the drafts.

Council House Sales

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority for the last year for which he has figures the average right-to-buy discounts made available to council tenants.

Mr. Yeo: A table showing the available information will be placed in the Library shortly.

Water Pollution

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority concerning the means of improving the biological control of filamentous algae of the cladophora family in British rivers, lakes and reservoirs.

Mr. Baldry: None. However, I understand that cladophora growth occurs from time to time when nutrient concentrations, flow and organic conditions are suitable. The National Rivers Authority will be addressing its possible control as part of its wider research into eutrophication.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will list by year for the last 10 years, and for each port in the United Kingdom, the number of tonnes of hazardous waste that was imported.

Mr. Trippier: Information on the importation of waste through ports in the United Kingdom is available only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988.

The information in respect of imports of waste through English ports for financial years 1988-89—October to March only—and 1989-90 is shown in the following table.

The provision of similar information for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Bathing Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from surfers in respect of bathing water quality.

Mr. Baldry: Representations by surfers have covered the scope and speed of the £3·5 billion programme of improvements to bathing and coastal water quality now under way.

Glass

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the percentage of glass recovered as a percentage of consumption in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Baldry: I understand from the British Glass Manufacturers Confederation that the provisional figures for 1990 are:

		Per cent.
(i)	Great Britain[1]	21
(ii)	Belgium[2]	60
	Denmark	40
	France	45
	Germany[4]	54
	Greece	16

[2] Includes glass collected in Luxembourg which has no glass manufacturing facilities.

Water Conservation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a direction to the National Rivers Authority to conserve water in the Doncaster metropolitan borough council area by restricting the amounts extracted by individuals and businesses.

Mr. Baldry: No. It is for the National Rivers Authority to consider how best to safeguard water resources in the Doncaster area as elsewhere. I understand that the authority is already well aware of, and actively investigating solutions to, certain water resource problems in that area.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations, individuals and statutory bodies he intends to consult regarding the implementation of the EC directive on freedom of access to information on the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department will be consulting a wide range of bodies including those which are directly affected by the directive. I am always willing to consider specific suggestions for the circulation list.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the implementation of the European Community directive on freedom of access to information into domestic law; and if he has set a target date for its implementation.

Mr. Trippier: My Department will be issuing a consultation paper shortly on our proposals. All member states are required to implement the directive in domestic law by the end of 1992. The Water Act 1989 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990 have already provided for public access to registers of pollution consents.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many unauthorised emissions of leachate have taken place from landfill waste sites to the environment in the last five years, giving details of where they took place and the names of the site owners;

(2) how many formal compliance notices have been issued by waste disposal authorities to landfill waste site operators in England during the past five years, with details of why these notices were served and the names of the site operators concerned.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally and I refer the hon. Member to the waste disposal authorities.

Community Charge

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce provisions to reimburse charge payers forced to pay an additional community charge in 1990-91 as payment for other people's debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: As part of its budgetary process and in line with proper accounting practice every local authority has to estimate the level of non-recoverable charges for the forthcoming year and then set a community charge which takes this into account. This is in principle no different from the position under the old rating system. Authorities must, of course, make every effort to collect the community charge from those who have not paid using the wide-ranging enforcement powers at their disposal. There will be no amnesty for non-payers. Nor would it be appropriate for the national taxpayer to make good the shortfall in local authority income caused by charges that they have failed to collect.

Uncollected Refuse (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now use his powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to secure the removal of accumulated refuse from the streets and alleyways of Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The relevant provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 have not yet been implemented. The corresponding powers under section 97 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are far-reaching and it is considered that they should be used only in the most serious circumstances. It has not yet been deemed necessary to use them in respect of waste collection and disposal and I am not persuaded that it would be appropriate to employ them to deal with the current situation in Liverpool.

Environmental Council

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 13 and 14 June.

Mr. Trippier: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

The Council agreed a directive to protect water from nitrate pollution from agricultural sources. This important new measure should help to secure improvements in water quality throughout the Community. It strikes a fair balance between protecting the environment and maintaining an efficient agriculture. Up to 2 million hectares of the United Kingdom may be designated as nitrate vulnerable zones under this directive, although we will only know the precise areas once the National Rivers Authority and the Government have completed the necessary monitoring and other studies. Within these zones farms will be required to comply with good agricultural practice, for example through controls on the timing and quantity of fertiliser and manure application. Member states will take additional measures where necessary to achieve the directive's objectives, taking account of their cost and effectiveness.

The Council finalised agreement of a directive setting tougher limits for car emissions following receipt of the European Parliament's views. The Council reaffirmed new standards, agreed in principle last year, which will mean that three-way catalysts must be fitted to all new petrol-engined cars from the end of 1992. The directive also sets tight limits on particulate emissions from diesel-engined cars. It was agreed that the standards will be reviewed in 1993 with a view to still tighter limits being introduced in 1996. The Commission indicated that it would also consider proposing a third stage of standards for introduction at the end of the decade.

Agreement was reached, subject only to a reservation from France, on a regulation on the importation of certain furs and the use of leghold traps. The use of all such traps will be banned throughout the Community by January 1995 at the latest. There will be a ban from January 1995 on the importation into the Community of furs of certain animals from countries which have not prohibited the use of the trap or which do not use traps that meet internationally agreed standards. There is provision for the import ban to be suspended for one year if progress is seen to be made in these countries towards applying internationally agreed standards.

The Council welcomed the progress achieved to date in discussions on the development of a European scheme for labelling environmentally less harmful products. Although some further work was still required, notably on the role of interest groups and simplification of the procedures for ensuring consistency in the award of labels at national level, it was anticipated that agreement should be reached at the next meeting of the Council.

Broad agreement was reached, subject to receipt of the European Parliament's opinion, on a regulation establishing a fund, NORSPS for the protection of the Community's northern coastal waters. This will largely parallel a similar instrument established last year for the protection of the Mediterranean and, when finally agreed, will provide financial assistance for certain types of measures aimed at reducing marine pollution.

Substantial progress was made in resolving many outstanding issues on a proposed directive to protect the habitats of wild flora and fauna. In the absence of final agreement on this directive the Council agreed a restricted version of a proposed regulation for a new Community-fund on action by the community relating to nature conservation ACNAT. For the present funding will be limited to projects related to the objectives of the existing wild birds directive and to the conservation of habitats and species in danger of extinction.

The Council also briefly discussed a proposal for a new all-embracing Community financial instrument for the environment, LIFE, and the draft environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty currently under discussion in Madrid.

Royal Armouries Collection

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the future of the Royal Armouries collection and the Tower of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I wish to announce today developments of major significance at the Tower of London, associated with the Royal Armouries' proposal for the establishment of a new museum in Leeds to take a major part of its collection. In recent years the tower and the armouries, two major features of our national heritage, have been less attractive to visitors than they deserve to be. Space is restricted and it is not possible to display the Crown Jewels, the collection of arms and armour and the many other treasures of the Tower in a manner worthy of them, or satisfying to visitors and people who wish to see them.

While the Royal Armouries will continue to display a significant part of its collection in the Tower of London it is proposing to develop a major new centre in Leeds, provided that the necessary resources can be found, including private sector funding. This would enable the greater part of the collection currently held in store to be put on display to the public. It would provide a new focus of national importance in the north of England attracting large numbers of people to a major tourist and educational centre. It would display a priceless part of our national heritage in new and exciting ways. No less important, it would help to revitalise the inner area of Leeds and have major benefits for the whole city. The project has the wholehearted support of the city council, the urban development corporation, and the whole community in the city.

Consultants have carried out an investment appraisal of the project for the Department and have concluded that it is likely to be an attractive investment. The Government are therefore funding further preparatory work by the Royal Armouries during this year. The extent of private sector funding of the new museum will be a key factor in the Government's consideration of public sector funding for the project. The Royal Armouries and all those involved in Leeds will therefore be working to achieve the maximum amount of private funding.

The move of part of the Royal Armouries collection out of the Tower would provide the Historic Royal Palaces Agency with an outstanding opportunity to relocate and re-display its most potent visitor attraction, the Crown Jewels, and in partnership with the Royal Armouries to re-present the white tower as one of the nation's most important historic buildings. I have now approved the agency's corporate plan containing these proposals.

If all these changes proceed, a review of the present staffing arrangements at the tower will be necessary in consultation with staff and all interested parties to ascertain the most effective ways of staffing the tower in the future.

Finally, in response to public demand, and to assist with the funding of these major changes, the tower is to be opened to visitors on Sunday mornings in summer. It is already open on Sunday afternoons in summer. This will bring the tower in line with other major tourist attractions in London, including other historic royal palaces. This change is planned to take place next summer to give time for full consultation with interested parties, including the trade unions, which represent the staff concerned.

Euratom Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to propose an amendment to the Euratom treaty to address environmental aspects of nuclear energy along the lines of the environmental amendment being proposed by the Government for the Single European Act.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 14 June 1991]: No. The Euratom treaty already covers environmental aspects of nuclear energy.

HEALTH

GP Budgets

14. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner budget holders are now established in the health authorities of Scunthorpe and Grimsby.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that there are six general practices within the areas of the Grimsby and Scunthorpe health authorities participating in the first wave of fundholding. Together they provide high quality primary care services to more than 16 per cent. of the population of those authorities.

North Manchester Health Authority

15. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the public health report published by the North Manchester health authority in December 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The North Manchester health authority has determined its priorities in the light of its annual public health report.

NHS Trusts

17. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his proposals for the appointment of chairmen or chairwomen-designate for the second wave of NHS trusts.

Mr. Waldegrave: No NHS trust chairmen or non-executive directors can be formally appointed until an NHS trust is established. Our current programme for second-wave NHS trusts envisages formal establishment in the autumn of this year. The names of the chairmen will be provided around the same time.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the means by which service users will be consulted when Salford and Wigan district health authorities submit applications for trust status.

Mr. Dorrell: No expressions of interest in trust status have been received from the hospitals or other units in either Salford or Wigan.

22. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether business plans for the second applications for trust status of hospitals will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The financial projections which second-wave trust applicants have been asked to submit have been prepared in confidence for the NHS management executive and it would not be appropriate to publish them.

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications have now been submitted to self-governing trust status for national health service hospitals and other units.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To date, 105 hospitals and other units have applied to become NHS trusts in April 1992.

24. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the BMA to discuss trust status hospitals.

Mr. Waldegrave: I frequently meet members of the medical profession to discuss a range of issues. My last formal meeting with the BMA was on 9 May.

Preventive Medicine

18. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways preventive medicine has been taken into account in general practitioners' contracts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health promotion and disease prevention are among the key principles of the GPs' new contract. GPs are now required to offer all patients advice on how to stay healthy and to offer health checks to specific groups of patients.

RU 486

19. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has reached any conclusions on licensing RU 486; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am afraid that I am unable to make a statement today regarding the licensing of RU 486. This is because of the obligation of confidentiality imposed upon Ministers and the Medicines Control Agency by virtue of section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Erythropoietin

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate for the growth in use of erythropoietin for the treatment of patients suffering from anaemia.

Mr. Dorrell: Like other new treatments, erythropoietin is being introduced progressively across the health service. It is for health authorities to assess their patients' requirements for the drug and make appropriate plans to ensure that need is met.

Mid-Essex DHA

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority to discuss health service provision in Mid-Essex district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans for meeting the regional chairman to discuss Mid-Essex health provision, but I am always happy to meet RHA chairmen both on a routine basis and whenever there is a specific need to discuss health service provision in their region.

Hip and Eye Operations

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hip replacement operations and (b) eye cataract operations were carried out by the national health service in 1979 and in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1979 the national health service carried out almost 29,000 hip replacement operations and almost 40,000 eye lens operations, most of which were for cataracts. The latest statistics show that in 1988-89 hip replacement operations had increased to almost 42,000 and eye lens operations to almost 79,000.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate capital expenditure on the national health service for the year 1978-79 and the last full year for which figures are available at current prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table:

Because of the redefinition of capital it is not possible to provide a consistent run of figures over the whole period. Figures in Presentation B have been adjusted to reflect the redefinition of capital. The figures in Presentation A do not reflect this and therefore are not comparable with those for later years.

Surgery

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures available for 1990 on the number of operations carried out by the national health service, and the number of private operations carried out by the national health service; and what information is held on the number carried out by private health services.

Mr. Dorrell: In the year ending March 1989, the latest year for which information is available centrally, an estimated 3·27 million operations were performed in NHS hospitals in England, of which an estimated 48,000 were on private patients. These numbers are provisional estimates based on incomplete data and may be subject to revision. Figures from the Independent Health Care Association indicate that there were some 510,000 operations carried out by the private sector in 1988.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries which had lower infant mortality rates than England in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1984.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The infant mortality rate in England has continued to fall since 1984. In 1990 it reached its lowest level at 7·9 per 1,000 live births.

The table lists the countries out of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's membership of 23 which, according to international sources of information, had lower infant mortality rates than England in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1984.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance, financial or otherwise, has been given to non-governmental organisations in each of the past five years for the control of drug abuse or for the care of victims.

Mr. Dorrell: The provision of treatment and rehabilitation services for drug misusers is the responsibility of local health authorities to whom the Government have made increasing sums available as set out in the table. Non-governmental organisations form an important part of service delivery, supported by regional earmarked allocations. Information is not held centrally on the proportion of money spent by regions on statutory and non-governmental organisations.

Between 1983 and 1991 £17·5 million was also made available under the time-limited central funding initiative (CFI). Details of this and other moneys made available by the Department for allocating direct to non-governmental organisations in the years in question are included in the table.

	Monies to non-governmental organisations directly funded by DoH		Monies direct to Health Authorities
	Section 64 £	C. F. I. £	£
1986-87	511,278	1,784,234	5,000,000
1987-88	568,258	1,564,097	6,367,000
1988-89	701,700	809,869	9,470,000
1989-90	777,875	432,498	14,793,000

Air Ambulances

Mr. Evenett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance services in England currently operate helicopter air ambulances or have such ambulances available to them.

Mr. Dorrell: Helicopter services operate in Cornwall, the London area, Kent and the west midlands. In addition there are a number of shared facilities with the police. Ambulance services are the responsibility of the relevant health authority and details of helicopter ambulance provision are not therefore collected centrally.

General Practitioners

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy on computer reimbursement for general practitioners for the current financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: Up to 50 per cent. of the cost of purchasing, leasing, maintaining and upgrading practice systems, and up to 70 per cent. of initial staff costs will be reimburseable in 1991-92. The limit related to list size which previously applied has been abolished. Separate arrangements apply to GP fundholders. We hope to be able to issue, in the near future, detailed guidelines to enable regional health authorities to implement this policy.

HIV

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of HIV positive individuals in the populations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the end of 1990, 13,292 laboratory reports of HIV-antibody positive tests in England, Wales and Northern Ireland had been received. Since this figure is based on persons who request an HIV test and proceed with the test after being counselled it represents an under-estimate of the total number of infected persons.

The Day report, "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome in England and Wales to end of 1993" published by the Public Health Laboratory Service in January 1990 provided an upper estimate of the number of HIV infected persons in England and Wales at the end of 1990 of 46,500, a copy of the report is available in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budget his Department has for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines, the services and responsibilities of his Department; and what amount of money has been spent on this publicity in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department does not have a budget specifically for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines. Publicity campaigns which included this type of advertising are as follows:

1986-87	Asian Mother and Baby	9,120
	AIDS Informtion	10,000
1987-88	AIDS Ethnic Dial and Listen	87,056
1988-89	AIDS—Ethnic Telephone Helpline	78,655
1989-90	None	—
1990-91	NHS Reforms and You	15,525
	Food Hygiene Regulations	2,398

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will simplify the application form for low income health benefits;

(2) if he will extend the validity of a prescription charges exemption certificate to 12 months;

(3) if he will extend to 12 months the time limit during which a refund may be obtained for health charges;

(4) if he will include the recipients of low income health benefits in the class eligible for refunds on spectacles.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 6 June at columns 300-1.

As my reply made clear, the review of the NHS low income scheme which is now under way will examine all aspects of the administration of the scheme and this will include optical refunds.

Consultant Merit Awards

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the consultant merit awards count towards the level of final superannuation for the consultant concerned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes, since they form part of a consultant's total salary.

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average age of the recipients of merit awards for consultants in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The distinction awards system operates on a calendar year and the average age of recipients for the various grades of awards granted in the year ended 31 December 1990 were:

A+	57
A	55

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of consultants' merit awards was for the years 1979-80 and 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The actual amounts paid out for distinction awards are not collected centrally. Award holders are paid pro rata to their sessional commitments to the NHS. Take-up is estimated to be 88·14 per cent. of the total amount authorised by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration.

For England and Wales the estimated payments in the years concerned were:

	Authorised by DDRB £	Estimated paid £
1979-80	19,991,000	17,621,000
1989-90	69,075,760	60,883,000

Blood Transfusions

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make immediate payments to non-haemophiliacs who contracted HIV/AIDS through infected national health service blood transfusions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have no plans to extend further the special financial help available for haemophiliacs.

Exercise and Diet

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to implement his proposals for individual exercise and diet programmes to improve the health of individuals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Our Green Paper "The Health of the Nation" published on 4 June, a copy of which is available in the Library, proposes a strategy for achieving a positive improvement in the nation's health, indentifying key areas for action, including diet and exercise, and setting targets to encourage and measure progress. It provides the basis of an extensive consultation process, running to 31 October 1991, during which the views of a wide range of professional bodies and organisations throughout the country will be sought. The results of the consultation will influence a White Paper on the health of the nation to be published later.

Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the numbers of nurses of all grades that will be required to work in the national health service by the year 2000.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The setting of staffing levels is a matter for individual health authorities.

Hospitals (Patient Care)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-fund-holding general practitioners are involved in the new national health service contracts for patient care in hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Contracts for health services provide the mechanism through which all NHS services will be secured in future. All GPs, of which over 23,000 are non-fundholding, are involved in contracts. District health authorities have consulted GPs extensively on their referral preferences. GPs have also been involved in considering quality improvements in services.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will invite and consider submissions concerning the effectiveness of a ban on tobacco advertising.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he plans to meet practitioners of alternative and complementary medical treatments to discuss his Green Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: It is open to any group or individual to make representations on the Green Paper during the consultation period.

Midwives

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives are currently in post in each of the health districts within the south-east Thames health region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest information held centrally reflects the position at 30 September 1990 and is currently being validated. Figures are expected to be available in six weeks and I will write to my hon. Friend at that time.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many students are currently training as midwives in England; and what proportion are men;

(2) how many places are available in England for direct entry midwifery students for the coming year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Provisional information from the English National Board for Nursing Midwifery and Health Visiting is that on 31 March 1991 there were 3,243 students training as midwives in England, including 24 men. The board's current estimate is that 147 places for pre-registration—direct entry—midwifery students will be available in England in the 1991-92 financial year.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives his Department intends to take to reduce waiting lists for elective surgery.

Mr. Waldegrave: The NHS management executive is agreeing targets with all 14 regional health authorities for substantial reductions, by March 1992, in the number of patients who wait too long. We are continuing the special waiting list fund in 1991-92 to help health authorities tackle this problem.

Residential Care Homes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibility residential care home owners and members of staff have to disclose any criminal record to the registration authority when applying to be registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Local authorities should ask applicants for registration in respect of residential care homes to declare any convictions they may have incurred. They should check with the police for the existence and content of any criminal record an applicant may have.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether people who are found unfit to run a residential care home or nursing home are automatically barred from running another home.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The names of people found unfit to run a residential care or nursing home are recorded on a national list of cancelled or refused registrations maintained by the Department since 1985. The list is available to local authorities.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if there are formal complaints procedures for people in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984;

(2) if all residents of homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 are given information about how to make a complaint.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The proprietors of residential care homes are required by regulation made under the Registered Homes Act 1984 to advise residents in writing as to how to make a complaint and to whom complaints should be addressed. The name and address of the registration authority must also be given for the same purpose.

In addition, the complaints procedures introduced in social services departments from 1 April 1991 provide for complaints made to registration authorities by or on behalf of residents to be dealt with under the terms of those procedures.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether nursing procedures in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 are carried out by care assistants.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Residential care homes are served by the community nursing service who are responsible for carrying out any nursing procedures that the residents health care requires. Residential care home staff may carry out any nursing tasks specifically delegated to them by the community nurse. Nursing homes are required to have a qualified nurse on duty at all times; care assistants may carry out nursing tasks under their supervision.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are national guidelines on standards in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 in relation to accommodation requirements, staffing levels and staff qualifications.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Regulations made under the Registered Homes Act 1984 require that all homes should provide adequate suitably qualified staff and reasonable accommodation in relation to the needs of residents. Registration may be refused under the Act where these requirements are not met.

The Act is supplemented by "Home Life: a code of practice for residential care", by the social services inspectorate publications in the "Caring for Quality" series, and by the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts' handbook on registration and inspection, copies of which are available in the Library.

Life Expectancy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish an estimate for the life expectancy of males and females at birth in 1988 for each national health service region in England.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

Figures by region are not available. The estimate for England as a whole is 72·7 for males and 78·3 for females.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Seventy-five ships have been chartered in the period. Two were registered in the United Kingdom. Rates paid by Her Majesty's Government for the charter of ships are commercial in confidence. There is no definitive normal charter rate.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the availability of (a) British and (b) non-British crews willing to enter the Gulf before and during the period of hostilities; if he will list the instances of non-British crews, on vessels chartered by his Department, refusing to enter Gulf waters; and if he will establish an inquiry into the impact of (i) the availability of ships and (ii) the availability of seafarers on the military operation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No problems were reported over the availability of British or non-British crews before or during hostilities. There were no reports of non-British crews refusing to enter Gulf waters.

The Government continue to keep a close watch on the state of the British flagged merchant fleet and on the availability of ships and seafarers to support military operations.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on occurrences of operational or communications problems involving any of the foreign-flagged merchant vessels hired by Her Majesty's Government for service in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No significant operational or communications problems involving foreign flagged merchant vessels hired by Her Majesty's Government have been reported.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the RAF and the Army Air Corps provided support to foreign military forces during operations to liberate Kuwait.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF and Army Air Corps aircraft provided a variety of assistance to coalition forces during Operation Granby, including air-to-air refuelling, airlift assistance and search and rescue support.

Redundant Sewage Plant

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the location of, and when he expects to place a contract for the decommissioning of a redundant sewage plant and surrounding area as advertised in the Ministry of Defence contracts bulletin of 11 October 1989.

Mr. Alan Clark: The plant in question is located at the AWE Aldermaston site. We expect to place an initial contract in September of this year.

Chieftain Tanks

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of Krauss Maffei to discuss the Chieftain replacement programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had no meetings with representatives of the company to discuss this issue since taking up office. Representatives of Krauss Maffei called on me on 6 June 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Discussions are continuing.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why United Kingdom dependants employed at RAF Wildenrath and RAF Gutersloh are not entitled to redundancy payments.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The terms and conditions of service for dependant employees serving with the British Forces in Germany do not make provision for redundancy payments. The average length of service for a dependant is 18 months, a period which would not normally attract an entitlement to redundancy terms. They are, however, entitled to two months' notice of dismissal. Where a dependant is to remain in Germany but their current post is to be cut, they will be offered any suitable vacancy on the same terms as German civilian employees.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether those service personnel who are due to be redeployed from RAF Wildenrath and RAF Gutersloh will be transferred into positions that are suitable to their particular skills.

UN Military Staff Committee

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his representative at the United Nations Military Staff Committee has raised the question of (a) the monitoring of the transfer of conventional arms or (b) the possible restriction on the export of military equipment to the middle east by France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United States of America and China in that committee.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list the dates of all meetings of the United Nations Military Staff Committee in the last 10 years and the work that has been undertaken by this committee.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Nations Military Staff Committee meets formally every fortnight. There have been 272 such meetings since the beginning of 1981, the latest taking place on 14 June 1991. The formal meetings of the UNMSC have been a useful forum for an exchange of views between the military representatives of the five permanent members of the UN Security Council. During the Gulf crisis, ad hoc meetings of the members of the UNMSC proved valuable for sharing information on naval deployments.

Nuclear Submarines

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which docks in the United Kingdom have had Z-berth safety assessments produced for them but were subsequently refused Z-berth status by the nuclear powered warships safety committee.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. Proposed new Z-berths are put forward to the nuclear-powered warship safety committee only when there is confidence in the berth's suitability.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what dates (a) Cardiff and (b) Barry docks were designated as sites for nuclear powered submarine berths; and how many nuclear-powered submarines have visited the Cardiff and Barry docks to date.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether on 7 July 1989 paragraphs 240(a)(1) and 240(a)(3) (c) of chapter II (Range Safety) of the Suffield (Batus) Range standing orders were fully complied with;

(2) if paragraph 123 (a and b) of chapter 1 of the Suffield (Batus) Range standing orders was complied with between 1 January 1983 and 7 July 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if paragraphs 202, 203 and 206 of chapter II (Range Safety) of the Suffield (Batus) Range standing orders were complied with between 1 January 1983 and 7 July 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Batus Training Area (Accident)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library annexes C and D to the summary report of the board of inquiry into the 7 July 1989 accident at Batus training area; and if he will make them available immediately to the solicitors acting for Grenadier Guardsmen Hicks, Ray and Povey.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the total cost to date for his Department in dealing with parliamentary questions and all correspondence regarding the case of guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the costs incurred on this specific case has not been collected.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why metal detectors were not used to clear the specific areas in which the 1st Battalion Grenadier Guards were planning to dig trenches whilst engaged on an exercise in July 1989 on the battalion's live firing training area where blind rounds could be expected to be encountered.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is considerable amount of metal debris on the range, making the use of metal detectors to locate live ammunition impracticable.

Household Division

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the changes in the field and public duties roles of the Household Division, consequent upon manpower cuts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army will continue to undertake public duties in an appropriate manner. We shall be looking at how best to meet these commitments from within a smaller Army while maintaining standards. Decisions on the future of individual regiments have yet to be taken.

Sellafield (Visit)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit to Sellafield of the King's Own Border Regiment; and whether the soldiers visiting the site were carrying firearms.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is the intention of the permanent staff at HQ 4th (Volunteer) Battalion the King's own Border Regiment to visit Sellafield power station at some future date as part of their employer liaison programme. None of the staff will be carrying firearms.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of HMS Endurance; what discussions he has had about retaining its presence in the South Atlantic; what decision he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The approximate annual running costs of HMS Endurance are £2·4 million, excluding maintenance and refit. Her future programme is under consideration, but no decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the expenditure on energy efficiency measures in each of the last two available years, (b) the number of dedicated energy managers and the number of years devoted to energy management in each of the last two available years and (c) the number of energy audits carried out in the last five years in relation to the civil estate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Prior to 1 April 1990, responsibility for energy efficiency on the MOD civil estate lay with the Department of the Environment (PSA). Any historical expenditure on energy efficiency is not separately identifiable. MOD staff effort now devoted wholly or mainly to energy efficiency represents about three person/years. Three energy audits were carried out in 1990-91.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report an up-to-date version of table 3·6 on energy consumption in volume 2 of the 1990 statement on the defence estimates, giving figures for both 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Chemical Plant, Samarra

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the chemical plant at Samarra.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Nations special commission set up under Security Council resolution 687 has concluded a preliminary inspection of Samarra. United Kingdom experts were provided to the commission for the inspection team, whose report is now awaited.

Jordan

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Jordan has maintained its repayment schedule in connection with recent arms deals.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

Jordan defaulted on its external debts in 1989. Debts guaranteed by ECGD, including those involving defence sales, are included in multilateral rescheduling arrangements through the Paris Club.

SCOTLAND

Hostel Deficit Grant

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the amount of hostel deficit grant paid to housing associations in each of the last five years;

(2) what was the total number of units of accommodation provided for from hostel deficit grant in each of the past five years.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the target of 300 new units of special needs accommodation, announced in the second strategic plan of Scottish Homes, is to be met; and if he will place any relevant material produced by Scottish Homes in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes finances special needs accommodation provided by housing associations from within its traditional rented programme, which in 1990-91 was approximately £149 million.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce the payment of the special needs management allowance currently available in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 13 June 1991 at col 652.

Child Maintenance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each of the last three years, (a) the number of child maintenance cases before the Scottish courts and (b) the number of cases where DNA paternity testing was involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally. So far as concerns DNA paternity testing, whilst it was always possible for parties to agree this procedure, the provisions of section 70 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990 which enable the court to request a party to provide samples for analysis, have been in force only since 1 January 1991. There is no information available as to the extent to which use is being made of the provisions.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr Lang: The information is as follows:

1989-90	60,173
1990-91	65,123
[1]1991-92	12,818

[1] to 7 June 1991

Housing Repossessions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses were repossessed in Scotland in each year since 1980; how many were former local authority houses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available in the form requested. The Council of Mortgage Lenders publishes statistics in its regular newsletters on various aspects of mortgage lending by building societies but this is on a GB basis and no corresponding information is available for Scotland only. No information about other mortgage lenders is held centrally.

Fish Farming

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many notifications have been made by salmon farmers for the use of ivermectin in each of the River Purification Authority areas in Scotland under the conditions of discharge consent before 6th June 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Ivermectin is not licensed for use in fish in the United Kingdom and accordingly river purification authorities would not expect to be notified of its use by salmon farmers. Any information on individual notifications is held by the river purification authorities and is not available centrally.

Hospitality

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer in the Official Report, 4 June, column 215-16, what was the amount spent on hospitality by the Scottish Office in real terms in each year since 1970.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is shown in the following table using the GDP deflator (base year 1989-90). Figures for 1970-1978 are not available.

Year	£	£ using GDP deflator
1979-80	15,283	30,667

Scotvec

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the further education colleges in Scotland which (a) presently offer and (b) intend to offer from autumn 1991 languages as the principal core subjects in courses leading to Scotvec-validated qualifications at higher national certificate or diploma level.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No courses leading to HNC/D level qualifications offered by further education colleges in Scotland have languages as the principal core subjects. However, an increasing number of courses have languages as a component.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review the framework of Scotvec-validation criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

The Scottish Vocational Education Council (SCOTVEC) recently reviewed their procedures for validating courses. In May 1991 the council issued a paper setting out new procedures, which will come into operation in 1991-92, aimed at maintaining consistent standards while delegating maximum responsibility to centres.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the operation of Scotvec-validated qualifications at HNC/D level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has received no representations on the operation of Scotvec-validated qualifications at HNC/D level.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of funding broken down by regional authority for (a) the total number of Scotvec-validated qualifications at HNC/D level and (b) those courses leading to Scotvec-validated qualifications at HNC/D level which have languages as the principal core subjects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Livestock Density

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the stocking levels are for cattle, sheep and pigs for each region within Scotland; and what stocking density per hectare this represents for cattle and sheep.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of cattle, sheep and pigs and the area of "grazing land" for each region within Scotland returned by main holdings at June 1990 is given in the following table. Reliable information on stocking densities is not readily available but my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as possible.

Health Service

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts for hospital and health board services awarded so far under the competitive tendering process by Argyll and Clyde health board, including successful tenderer and value of contract.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Contracts awarded in the Argyll and Clyde health board area are expected to realise £2·3 million savings over the three-year contract period. These savings release resources for re-investment in direct patient care.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 285, on the methodology used to produce his recent local tax exemplifications, if he will list the level of central Government grant assumed to be allocated to each Scottish local authority to produce the exemplifications; and how the distribution of grant was derived.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 June 1991]: I refer to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 30 April at columns 89-90.

House Repairs

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to housing authorities for repairing and maintaining houses in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Information relating to the cost of local housing authorities of repairing and maintaining their own houses is as follows:

Note: The 1990-91 figure is provisional. All figures are at outturn prices.

Child Employment

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his estimate of the number of school children working part-time in non-industrial undertakings who are in breach of child employment regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers of children working part-time in non-industrial undertakings who are in breach of child employment regulations by category of employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Information held centrally about offences under the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1937 does not at present record separately those offences which relate to child employment.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the percentages of total in-patients on waiting lists who have been waiting for more than one and two years at March 1991 by health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The information requested is not available.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Schemes

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money his Department has contributed to training, retraining, employment schemes and job clubs and all other programmes to reduce unemployment in Falmouth and Camborne over each of the last 10 years; what forward plans have been made for the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested. However, in the last 10 years the Employment Department has provided a range of opportunities to assist the unemployed in the Falmouth and Camborne area, including youth training, community programme, employment training advisory services to jobseekers and job clubs. In the last two financial years —1989-90 and 1990-91, my Department has allocated a total of £200·788 million to the south-west region to assist training and unemployment measures.

Devon and Cornwall TEC has been allocated a budget of £50,062,396 in 1991-92 to enable it to plan and deliver training and enterprise provision in their area. The TEC will be paying particular attention to the needs of the unemployed. Employment service offices in Falmouth, Redruth and Camborne offer a full range of programmes and services to help unemployed people back to work, including advisory interviews, job club, job interview guarantee, travel to interview scheme, Restart courses and help for people with disabilities. Programme development funding has also been used for a project, in the Camborne/Redruth area, called "Teamwork" which is providing long-term unemployed clients with the opportunity to increase their employment and training prospects. The employment service Cornwall-Plymouth area office has been allocated £427,825 for expenditure on programmes in 1991-92.

Approved Training Organisations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for (a) 12 months ago and (b) the latest date for which he has figures how many approved training organisations there are; and what are their names.

Mr. Jackson: The numbers and names of approved training organisations is a matter for individual training and enterprise councils. TECs have agreed to ensure that providers secure approved training organisation or equivalent status within the period of time set out in each TECs agreed business plan.

Prison Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils are involved in work and training in prisons.

Mr. Jackson: Responsibility for training in prisons lies with the Home Office prison service. It is not possible to identify which training and enterprise councils are involved in work and training in prisons. We are, however, aware of two pilot projects run by Devon and Cornwall TEC.

Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures (a) from the New Earnings Survey and (b) estimates for 1991-92 for (A) average gross earnings for full-time manual males, (B) the percentage of (i) full-time males, (ii) full-time manual males, (iii) full-time non-manual males, (iv) full-time females, (v) full-time manual females, (vi) full-time non-manual females, (vii) all full-time employees, (viii) all full-time manual employees and (ix) all full-time non-manual employees, earning less than this amount and (C) percentages earning less than this amount in the same categories as in (B) but including part-timers.

Training (Southwark)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the 10 employers in Southwark with the largest number of people being trained by them.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested.

The recently established South Thames training and enterprise council which became operational on 17 May with a budget of £17·971 million has, as one of its primary objectives, the improvement of commitment among employers to training their employees. The TEC chairman, John Roberts, is managing director of Post Office Counters based in Southwark, which has an exemplary record in training its employees and was national training award winners in 1989, training 1,300 employees.

Tourism, Bournemouth

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to provide new help to the tourist industry in Bournemouth.

Mr. Jackson: The Department's assistance to the tourism industry is channelled via the English tourist board. In the 1991-92 financial year the English tourist board will make available to the Southern tourist board, which covers Bournemouth, funds totalling £436,000.

Unemployment Benefit (Disqualification)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals were disqualified from unemployment benefit (a) in Wales as a whole and (b) by each employment office in Wales under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the employment service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 108, if he will list the main items of expenditure included in the £523,000 spent on improving energy efficiency.

Mr. Forth: The main items of expenditure are as follows:

Surveys	259,000
Training	32,000
Energy saving projects	142,000
Salaries (6 man-years at £15K per year)	90,000

Coal Mining, Neath

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for employees in coal mining in the Neath constituency for each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Jackson: Information for employees in employment according to industry and by parliamentary constituency is available only from the censuses of employment taken in 1984, 1987 and 1989. At September 1984, there were an estimated 2,500 employees employed in coal mining (activity heading 1113 of the standard industrial classification) in the Neath constituency. The comparable figures for 1987 and 1989—September of each of those years—are 1,300 and 600 respectively.

Kingston Area Training Consortium

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of grant awarded by the Training Agency in 1990-91 to Kingston area training consortium; and what was the grant awarded to the Kingston area training consortium in 1991-92 by the west London training and enterprise council.

Mr. Jackson: It is not possible to provide this information. Details of financial arrangements between training and enterprise councils and their training managers are commercial in confidence.

Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on how much money his Department has contributed to retraining, training and employment schemes and job clubs and all other projects to reduce unemployment in the Chelmsford local authority area in each of the financial years since 1979-80; and what are his forward plans for the next three years.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 23 May 1991]: The information is not available in the form requested. However in the last 10 years the Employment Department has provided a range of opportunities to assist the unemployed in the Chelmsford area, including youth training, community programme, employment training, advisory services to jobseekers and job clubs. Although, because of changes to the content and collation of statistics, comparable figures are not available for previous years, in the last financial year—1990-91—my Department has allocated to the Essex area £12,196,000 to assist training measures and £489,618 to assist unemployment measures.

The Government are determined to ensure that unemployed people have the best possible advice and support to help them find jobs and to provide special help where it is needed. On training, this year, Government are spending more than two and a half times in real terms the amount spent in 1978-79.

In the future training and enterprise provision will be delivered by the training and enterprise councils. Essex TEC has been allocated a budget of £26·5 million in 1991-92 to enable them to plan and deliver training and enterprise provision in their area. The TEC will be paying particular attention to the needs of the unemployed.

Employment Service offices in Chelmsford offer a full range of pogrammes and services to help unemployed people back to work, including advisory interviews, job club, travel to interview scheme, Restart courses and Essex "Jobsearch"—a local job club for the newly unemployed. The employment service Essex area office has a programme budget of £620,156 in 1991-92.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines govern the maximum length of time that the same consultancy practice may be continuously employed by a Government Department.

Mr. Mellor: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines there are governing the awarding of consultancy contracts on a cost-reimbursable basis.

Mr. Mellor: None, but advice on contracting with management consultants can be found within the Treasury's booklet, "Seeking Help from Management Consultants", and this includes at annex 7 a description of the salient points of such a contract.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has had on the subject of fiscal measures to increase environmental protection in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have received a number of such representations.

Mr. Maples: We hope to complete consultations with law enforcement agencies shortly.

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much inheritance-related tax has been received in respect of Heveningham hall.

Mr. Maude: The information requested about Heveningham hall is covered by the normal rules ensuring taxpayers' confidentiality.

Income Tax

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to his answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 296, he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1991-92 and in a full year of introducing a higher rate band of income tax of 50 per cent. on taxable incomes over £36,705.

Mr. Maude: Compared with the income tax regime considered in the previous answer, the revenue yield at 1991-92 levels of income of introducing the rates of income tax shown in the table would be about £0·1 billion lower in 1991-92, and about £0·2 billion lower in a full year. In rounded terms the total yield, compared with the income tax regime for 1991-92 proposed in the Budget, would be about £1 billion in 1991-92 and about £2 billion in a full year. The estimates do not take account of the consequential effect on capital gains tax, nor do they allow for any behavioural effects that might result from such an increase.

23,701 to 36,705	40
Over 36,705	50

Taxable income is income subject to tax from all sources after deducting allowances and reliefs.

VAT (Zero-rating)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1991-92 and in a full year of abolishing value-added tax zero-rating on all items except food, children's clothing, and domestic fuel and power.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimates of the revenue effect of abolishing zero-rating on all items of domestic expenditure other than food, children's clothing, and fuel and power are as follows:

1991-92[1]	3·7
Full year[2]	5·2

[1]Assuming a 1 April change
[2]Assuming all receipts in 1991-92 reflect VAT at 17·5 per cent.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all items currently subject to the zero rate of value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Schedule 5 to the VAT Act 1983 applies the zero rate of VAT to a wide range of goods and services. The main areas covered are listed in table 4B.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for 1991-92 which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Unemployment

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the increase in unemployment from May 1990 to May 1991 in terms of (a) increased social security payments and (b) reduced taxation receipts, both direct and indirect.

Mr. Maude: A rise of 100,000 in unemployment is estimated directly to add around £305 million to benefit expenditure in 1991-92—as shown in table 24 of the DSS departmental report, Cm. 1514. Estimates of the effects on tax receipts and public finances as a whole would depend on the assumptions made.

Birds

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the number of birds which were illegally imported into the United Kingdom for each year since 1987.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs detected the following numbers of birds being illegally imported into the United Kingdom in contravention of the laws relating to the convention on the international trade in endangered species—CITES.

	Number
1986-87	209
1987-88	208
1988-89	380
1989-90	533
1990-91	243

It is not possible to estimate how many illegal importations may have evaded Customs controls.

TRANSPORT

London Transport

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will increase Government grant to London Transport in 1991-92.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I am pleased to announce that I am increasing London Transport's grant by £53 million and its external financing limit by £39·8 million. This will be charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the level of planned public expenditure. The increase is additional to the £55 million extra grant for 1990-91 announced in February this year. I have approved it because of the current downturn in LT's property receipts and revenue. It will enable LT to repay borrowing it undertook in 1990-91 and to proceed with important investment in the underground and docklands light railway.

British Rail

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about British Rail's external financing limit for 1991-92.

Mr. Rifkind: We have now completed discussions with the railways board about the serious financial situation that British Rail faces this year in the light of the downturn in the property market and its reduced forecasts of revenue. The Government have decided to increase British Rail's external financing limit for 1991-92 by £400 million, to a revised total of £1,522 million. This increase will be charged to the reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. Last year BR's EFL was increased in-year by £102 million, and BR subsequently overshot the revised EFL by £316 million. I am not, however, requiring BR to meet that overshoot from this year's provision, as would normally be required. I have also today told the chairman of British Rail that I have approved his proposal to invest £127 million in 188 additional Networker vehicles for commuter services in south-east London and north Kent.

HEALTH

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial year 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dentists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of dentists in each family health service authority are offering a less than full NHS service.

Mr. Dorrell: Dentists are independent contractors who are free to accept or refuse patients as they see fit. However, having accepted a patient into an NHS continuing care or capitation arrangement, a dentist is required to offer all the care and treatment that is necessary to secure and maintain oral health.

Immunology

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the locations of consultant immunologists in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Contracts for consultants are held by regional health authorities or, where appropriate, by teaching health districts. The table shows the locations of consultant immunologists, by regional health authority.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the maximum help available to people who receive vouchers to cover the entire cost of spectacles.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Voucher values were increased overall by 6 per cent. from 1 April this year. The values of the most commonly prescribed vouchers A, B and D were increased by 7·2, 6·1 and 6·5 per cent. respectively.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the total number of nursing clinical grading appeals already heard in the Northern region and the numbers (a) upheld or (b) rejected.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figures for nurse clinical grading regional appeals for staff employed in the Northern regional health authority area are as follows—up to 31 May 1991:

	Number
Total number heard:	77
of which
(a) upheld	14
(b) rejected	8

No national appeals have been heard to date. Information on local appeals is not collected centrally.

Prescribing Incentive Schemes

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received from family health services committees and doctors over the delay in being notified over the introduction of the prescribing incentive schemes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to take action on the prescribing incentive schemes submitted by family health services committees; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many family health services committees were notified that the prescribing incentive schemes submitted for his consideration had been agreed by his Department before 1 April.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received several representations from family health services authorities concerning the approval of indicative prescribing incentive scheme applications. I shall be announcing shortly which incentive scheme applications have been approved.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he gives to general practices on the introduction of prescribing incentive schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: "Improving Prescribing", issued in June 1990, set out proposals for the operation of local, voluntary incentive schemes. Further guidance was included in NHS management letter EL(91)12, issued to family health services authorities and regional and district health authorities on 31 January 1991. Copies of "Improving Prescribing" and EL(91) 12 are available in the Library.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 69, if he will list the main items of expenditure included in the £100,000 spent in 1990-91 on improving energy efficiency.

Mr. Dorrell: The main items of expenditure included are: dry lining of interior walls; 8-inch cork insulation as part of flat roof replacements; replacement of ill-fitting exterior doors.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of energy audits carried out in his Department in the past five years and for each audit a statement of its main conclusions.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 June 1991]: For the years up to 1989-90 it is not possible to provide separate information for the Department of Health. However, some of the conclusions that emerged from audits carried out on behalf of the Department of Health and Social Security up to that time are as follows:

1. Convert tungsten lighting to compact fluorescent.
2. Change fluorescent tubes to high efficiency types.
3. Adjust boiler controls to eliminate overheating during occupancy and unnecessary heating during silent hours.
4. Maintain records of the utilities used.
5. Remedy defects to windows and doors.
6. Display "Energy Management" posters.

In 1990-91 there were no energy audits carried out in the Department. It is hoped to carry out energy audits during 1991-92 on two buildings that will remain part of the Department's estate for the foreseeable future.

Ambulance Paramedic Services

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in converting NHS training directorate ambulance aid and extended ambulance, paramedic training to national vocational qualifications status; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Progress on the development of national vocational qualifications for ambulance staff is well advanced. Occupational standards for ambulance staff have been extensively tested throughout the NHS and in collaboration with the armed forces and the voluntary sector.

The proposed qualifications will be presented to the December meeting of the Care Sector Consortium, which is the lead industry body for health and social care, and on approval will go to the National Council for Vocational Qualifications for formal acceptance.

It is expected that qualifications will be available from January 1992, and will be phased in over the following two years, replacing the existing NHS training directorate qualifications.

A process for the conversion of existing NHS training directorate qualifications to NVQs is being determined and will be included in the December submission to Care Sector Consortium.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance services in England operate motor cycle or other dedicated fast response paramedic services; what assessment has been made of the costs and benefit of such services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not collected centrally, although we are aware that there are a number of fast response services operating around the country. It is for individual ambulance services to assess the costs and benefits of such services in the light of local circumstances.

Helicopter Ambulances

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the cost and benefit of providing helicopter air ambulance facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A long-term, independent study of costs, performance and benefits of air ambulance services in London and Cornwall, funded by the Department, is under way. Any assessment will need to await the results of the study.

Food Premises

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to lay the regulations on registration of food premises under the Food Safety Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We will make an announcement when we have fully considered the responses made during the consultation on the draft regulations.

Child Care Inquiry, Staffordshire

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to obtain an independent evaluation of the role of the social services inspectorate in the events leading up to the Staffordshire child care inquiry.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 June 1991]: Children's homes are the responsibility of local authorities. It is their job to see that proper management and monitoring systems are in place.

An independent inquiry has been undertaken by Mr. Allan Levy QC and Mrs. Barbara Kahan into the "pindown" experience and the protection of children in Staffordshire children's homes. They were quite satisfied that the social services inspectors who had visited homes in Staffordshire in 1987 as part of a general review on the development of family centres were not told about "pindown" and its workings.

Member for Don Valley, (a) where the equipment and the present staff at the Welsh school of instrument making and repair will be relocated when it closes at the end of the current academic year and (b) what alternative arrangements have been made to continue these studies.

Sir Wyn Roberts: These are matters for Mid Glamorgan county council, which administers the school, and for Ystrad Mynach college of further education.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 79, to the hon. Member for Don Valley, if he will list the six representations he received, and any others to date, over the closure of the Welsh school of instrument making and repair, showing in his answer whether they were for or against the closure.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The representations received were all by or on behalf of individuals and therefore I cannot give further details. All expressed concern at the closure of the Welsh school of instrument making and repair.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by year for the past five years, and for the current academic year, the number of students taught at the Welsh school of instrument making and repair at Abertridwr; what nationality they were; and what was the student establishment recommended.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not readily available.

Algae

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to improve the biological control of filamentous algae of the cladophora family in Welsh rivers, lakes and reservoirs.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I understand that cladophora growth occurs from time to time when nutrient concentrations, flow and organic conditions are suitable. The National Rivers Authority will be addressing its possible control as part of its wider research into eutrophication.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff there are in each of the counties of Wales who teach pupils with special educational needs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of full-time and part-time qualified teachers in special schools as at January 1990 is as follows:

	Number

Gwent	73
Gwynedd	50
Mid Glamorgan	104
Powys	28
South Glamorgan	131
West Glamorgan	48

Information in respect of the number of staff in maintained primary and secondary schools who teach pupils with special educational needs is not collected centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many free-standing special educational needs schools there are in each of the counties of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of maintained special schools as at January 1990 is given in the table:

	Number
Clwyd	11
Dyfed	5
Gwent	6

South Glamorgan	15
West Glamorgan	5

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his policy concerning special educational needs provision in Wales;

(2) what policy initiatives he proposes concerning the special educational needs of pupils in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Education Act 1981 provides the framework for the provision of education for pupils with special educational needs. Local education authorities have the responsibility for securing that appropriate educational provision is made for such pupils. The Education Reform Act 1988, in particular the requirements of the national curriculum, ensures that pupils with special educational needs have an entitlement to the same curriculum as their peers.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to call an all-Wales conference on special educational needs provision in the schools of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils with special educational needs there are in each of the local educational authorities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of pupils with statements of special educational needs as at January 1990 is given in the table:

Powys	293
South Glamorgan	1,323
West Glamorgan	613

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the integration of special educational needs pupils into mainstream schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Education Act 1981 provides that local education authorities shall place children with statements of special educational needs in ordinary schools, provided that parental views are taken into account, and that such placement is compatible with the child receiving the provision required, the provision of efficient education for his peers and the efficient use of resources.

River Dee

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases there have been of unauthorised discharges into the River Dee in the last 10 years, giving details of the source of the discharge and the quantities involved.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the public inquiry to be made into Browning Ferris's application to construct and operate a waste disposal unit in Newport, Gwent, will take place.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There are two appeals which will be heard jointly on 1 October 1991 in the council chamber, civic centre, Newport.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from individuals and organisations concerning the application from Browning Ferris to construct a waste disposal unit at Newport, Gwent.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There are four representations, one of which is a petition of 19 signatures.

Waste Exports

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much controlled waste is exported from Clwyd to (a) English counties and (b) Welsh counties.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many formal compliance notices have been issued by waste disposal authorities to landfill waste site operators in Wales during the past five years, with details of why they were issued and the names of the site operators concerned;

(2) how many unauthorised emissions of leachate have taken place in Wales from landfill sites to the environment in the last five years, with details of where these have taken place and the names of the site owners responsible.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally and I refer the hon. Gentleman to the waste disposal authorities.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total sum for implementation of the Children Act 1989 which is allowed for within Government grant to local authorities in Wales (a) via specific grants and (b) via the element included in standard spending assessment in the present financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Specific grant to local authorities in 1991-92 for implementation of the Children Act is £240,000. Standard spending assessments, supported through revenue support grant, are not hypothecated to particular items.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has anything to add by way of a correction to the oral answer to the right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot) on 29 April, Official Report, column 3, about NHS expenditure.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The figure I used was £615 million. The mistake was made in the Official Report, and it will be corrected in the Bound Volume in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has for the future management of the links between the Department of Education and Science, the Treasury and individual grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have at present no plans to change the existing funding arrangements for grant-maintained schools. They will keep those arrangements under review as the number of grant-maintained schools increases.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give energy consumption figures for 1990-91 for the 76 per cent. of Cabinet Office holdings referred to in the answer of 6 June 1990, Official Report, column 613, for electricity in kilowatt hours, for gas in therms and for liquid fuel in litres.

The Prime Minister: The 1990-91 energy consumption figures for the 76 per cent. of Cabinet Office holdings referred to in the answer of 6 June 1990, at column 613, are as follows:

Electricity 3,641,991 kilowatt hours
Gas 36,164 therms
Liquid Fuel 504,244 litres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

The Attorney-General: The public appointments for which the Attorney-General has had responsibility during the last five years are for the appointment of the Director of Public Prosecutions, the Director of the Serious Fraud Office, the Director and deputy Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland as well as the Crown Solicitor for Northern Ireland. Mr. Martin Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General, how many court actions related to mortgage repossessions there were in (a) Hammersmith and Chelsea and (b) Westminster county courts in each year since 1986; and what percentage of the population this represents.

The Attorney-General: The number of mortgage actions for possession entered and orders made for possession in (a) West London and (b) Westminster county courts in each year since 1986 and the percentage of the population in the boroughs of (a) Hammersmith and Fulham and Kensington and Chelsea (b) City of Westminster for the years 1986 to 1989, the most recent year available, are shown in the table.

ENVIRONMENT

Business Rates (Appeals)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals have been lodged by the South Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal in respect of the uniform business rate for 1990-91; and how many have been received to date for the current financial year.

Mr. Key: The South Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal received about 13,200 appeals against entries in the 1990 non-domestic rating lists by the end of May 1991. Of these, 12,500 were received in 1990-91 and 700 were received in the first two months of this financial year.

Community Charge Appeals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals have been lodged by the South Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal in respect of the community charge for 1990-91; and how many have been received to date for the current financial year.

Mr. Key: The South Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal has received to date 139 appeals about the community charge. Of these, 117 were received in 1990-91 and 22 have been received so far this financial year.

Public Conveniences

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policy guidance is given by his Department to local authorities regarding the provision of public conveniences.

Mr. Key: None.

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many and what representations his Department has received in the last 12 months regarding the provision of public conveniences.

Mr. Key: Apart from my hon. Friend himself, one other hon. Member has written about a constituent's concern at the closure of public conveniences in his area. Three members of the public and two interested organisations have also written about the level of provision of public conveniences.

Community Charge

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances an individual could receive a revised poll tax bill for 1991-92 higher than one for 1991-92 received before the announcement of the general reduction scheme and the changes to the community charge reduction scheme in March; how many people he estimates to have received higher bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The community charge reduction scheme as it was amended in March 1991 requires local authorities to calculate reductions based on residence on 31 March 1991. This enables people who moved or became 18 during 1990-91 to qualify for the scheme. It also means that where the number of adults in a household is less than it was on 31 March 1990, account is taken of the lower household liability. No information is available on the numbers of households for which this was a consideration.

St. Andrews Gardens, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the Bullring, St. Andrews gardens, Liverpool; what talks he has had about its future; if he will meet tenants' representatives to discuss the conditions in which they are living; and whether he will agree to visit this tenement block.

Mr. Yeo: The future of the council houses at the Bullring, St. Andrews gardens, Liverpool, the condition of the living accommodation there and the need to meet and consult tenants' representatives are all matters for Liverpool city council. It is responsible for the management and maintenance of its stock.

I have had no discussions about the future of the Bullring although a number of initiatives which are under way, particularly the city challenge invitation to the city, will involve some discussion with the Government later in the autumn. I understand that the city challenge area being considered by the city would include St. Andrews gardens.

I have no plans to visit Liverpool in the near future.

Emissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil service personnel have been involved in considering the report into evaluation of nitrogen oxide abatement technologies for large combustion plants; what is the current total of staff hours devoted to consideration of the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: For the purposes of part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the technology for the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides from large combustion plant is currently being reviewed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The report to which the hon. Member refers is being taken into account in that review. It is not possible to provide a separate estimate of the number of staff hours devoted to the report.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the objectives set out in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance"—Cm. 1200—have so far been achieved.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 26 March this year detailing the major initiatives taken in the six months since the publication of the environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance".

Since then we have continued to work hard at implementing commitments, taking the tally of initiatives so far to well over 100. Among the main achievements of the past three months have been the announcement of new planning controls over farm and forestry buildings and over the demolition of houses; the launch of a campaign of conservation awareness for farmers; announcements of future policy on environmentally sensitive areas; first offers of funding for a wide range of environmental projects by voluntary organisations under the new environmental grant fund; the first meetings of new discussion fora with business and the voluntary sector; the publication of an environmental directory for business; the report of the working group on tourism and the environment; consultation of local waste management plans for recycling; the launch of a new grant scheme for the renovation of cathedrals; and the application of substantial sections of the Environmental Protection Act on 1 April 1991.

Publicity Budget (Ethnic Publications)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what budget his Department has for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines, the services and responsibilities of his Department; and what amount of money has been spent on this publicity in each of the last five years.

Mr. Heseltine: For the most part my Department informs the public about its services and responsibilities through an extensive range of explanatory leaflets and booklets rather than through advertising. Where a need has been identified, many of these publications are translated into languages other than English.

My Department has no specific budget for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines. Between 1985-86 and 1988-89 no expenditure was incurred on such advertising. In 1989-90, £21,758 was spent on advertising in the ethnic press to promote awareness of the explanatory leaflets on the community charge and the community charge benefits scheme.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many instances there have been of pollution of water courses and drinking water supplies by leachate from landfill waste sites in England, during the past five years, with details of the extent and source of pollution, and the names of the site owners responsible.

Mr. Baldry: The National Rivers Authority is responsible for monitoring water pollution. Detailed information of the nature requested is not held centrally, but details obtained from the authority's monitoring programme are entered in the public registers kept at each of its regional offices.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has had since his appointment on the subject of economic measures to increase environmental protection.

Mr. Heseltine: There is widespread debate in the United Kingdom and internationally about the use of economic measures to supplement regulation as a means of protecting the environment. My Department continues to be closely involved. The Government's approach to these matters was described in chapter 1 and annex A of the White Paper "This Common Inheritance"—Cm 1200—published last September.

Protection of Habitats

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to implement the EC directive on the protection of habitats and species.

Mr. Baldry: The habitats directive has not yet been adopted by the Council. The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 will provide the framework for United Kingdom compliance with the directive when adopted.

Pollution Incidents, Canvey Island

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent pollution incidents Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has investigated at the Shell Haven industrial plant at Canvey Island on 6 May.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has been informed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution that it did not make any pollution incident investigations at the Shell Haven industrial plant at Canvey Island on 6 May 1991.

Hedgerows

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the powers of local authorities to protect hedgerows of high amenity or wildlife value.

Mr. Baldry: In our White Paper "This Common Inheritance" we announced our intention to give local planning authorities powers to protect important hedgerows in their areas. A consultation paper issued in December gave further details. Responses to that paper have raised a number of key issues, and we are giving these careful consideration. It would therefore be premature to take action on this matter in the present Planning and Compensation Bill. My aim is to ensure that any scheme commands the widest possible agreement and will be fair and practicable.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the level of Government grant to the Rural Development Commission for (a) each of the last five financial years and (b) the current financial year.

Mr. Baldry: This information is included in figure 23 of the "Department of the Environment's Annual Report 1991"—Cm 1508—a copy of which was put in the Library of the House on 13 February 1991.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum for implementation of the Children Act 1989 which is allowed for within Government grant to local authorities in England (a) via specific grants and (b) via the element included in standard spending assessment in the present financial year.

Mr. Key: The specific grant to local authorities in England in 1991-92 for social services training includes an element for training for the implementation of the Children Act 1989. Standard spending assessments are not disaggregated into identifiable amounts for individual functions.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what formula has been used to determine the element within standard spending assessment for local authorities in England for the costs of implementing the Children Act 1989 in the current financial year.

Mr. Key [holding answer 18 June 1991]: Standard spending assessments are not disaggregated into identifiable amounts for individual functions. The methodology for calculating the "Social Services for Children" sub-block of the personal social services SSA is set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) and the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (England), which are available in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has given any remit to Nirex to undertake research or exploratory drillings connected with the long-term disposal of high-level radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No such remit has been given. United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. does not have responsibility for high-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the written answer of the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) on 16 December 1981, Official Report, columns 171-2, still represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to the long-term option for disposing of high-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Baldry: Government policy for high level radioactive waste is set out in the 1982 White Paper, "Radioactive Waste Management"—Cmnd 8607.

Birds

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken to determine the origin of birds offered for sale in the United Kingdom for which no exemption has been granted to permit sale under the convention on international trade in endangered species.

Mr. Baldry: Under EC regulation 3626/82, which implements the convention on international trade in endangered species, only birds of certain species require sales exemptions. My Department monitors sales of these birds and investigates any apparent infringements.

Water Services

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the report of the Director General of Water Services for 1990.

Mr. Baldry: I am pleased to announce that the director general has prepared his report for 1990 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Sheffield Development Corporation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 166, with regard to Sheffield urban development corporation, if he will make a statement on the part played by Sheffield development corporation in the establishment of the Meadowhall shopping complex and the jobs created there.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 18 June 1991]: At the inception of Sheffield development corporation in June 1988, development of the Meadowhall complex was already under way. I expect Meadowhall, in common with other commercial enterprises in the area, to benefit from the commitment to regeneration evidenced by the urban development corporation.

Energy Management

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answers of 5 June 1990, Official Report, column 483, and 6 June 1991, Official Report, column 287, when his Department ceased to have a dedicated energy manager; and what other duties are carried out by the officials in the energy management unit.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 18 June 1991]: Since September 1990 the work of my Department's energy management unit has been broadened to include other associated environmental issues as part of a policy of developing departmental practice which preserves and enhances the environment. Energy conservation remains a key element of the unit's work and the success of the unit is demonstrated by the reduction in departmental energy consumption reported in my reply to the hon. Member of 12 June 1991.

Water Pollution

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ask for an investigation by the National Rivers Authority, following the refusal of Dutch harbour authorities to allow a ship to empty ballast water taken aboard from the River Humber because of high levels of pollution identified in the water content.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 18 June 1991]: The National Rivers Authority carries out extensive and regular monitoring of the Humber estuary's water and sediment which shows that in general the estuary meets European environmental quality standards on heavy metals. I have, however, brought the hon. Member's concern to the attention of the authority and have asked it to respond to him direct.

Dredging

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his practice to refuse any more dredging orders off the Essex coast where there is evidence of potential damage to fish.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The decision to grant a licence for the extraction of marine sand and gravel rests with the Crown Estate after consultation with those whose interests may be affected by the proposed dredging. My Department is responsible for co-ordinating these consultations and formulating the Government view. Each proposal is considered on its merits and I carefully examine all potential environmental impacts including fisheries before deciding whether or not to grant a favourable Government view. On the basis of a favourable Government view the Crown Estate will decide whether to issue a licence to dredge and will lay down appropriate conditions to protect marine and coastal interests.

Land Use

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to co-ordinate and refine land use and economic activity classifications used by the Central Statistical Office, the Ordnance Survey, the Valuation Office, Her Majesty's Land Registry and his Department, respectively, since the report "Handling Geographic Information", prepared under the chairmanship of Lord Chorley.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 13 June 1991]: No specific steps have been taken to co-ordinate and refine land use and economic activity classifications, but the following closely related initiatives are under way.

In line with the Government's response to the report "Handling Geographic Information", all the bodies mentioned are represented on the inter-departmental working group on the tradeable information initiative established to facilitate the wider availability of Government-held spatially referenced data.

The national land use classification—NLUC—published in 1975, is commended by my Department for adoption in any process of compiling land use data. The categories used in my Department's land use change statistics—LUCS—are based on the NLUC, modified to take account of what it is feasible to record from Ordnance Survey maps. None of the other bodies uses a land use classification, except the Ordnance Survey in its work for my Department on the LUCS.

The economic activity classification used by the Central Statistical Office and my Department is the standard industrial classification. Member states of the European Community are required under regulation 3037/90 to adopt a new economic activity classification by 1993. None of the other bodies uses an economic activity classification.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what methods are known to Her Majesty's Government to carry out the destruction of nuclear materials as is set out in clause 6(4) in the Radioactive Material (Road Transport) Bill.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The method of destruction/disposal would be a matter for the courts to decide at the time and would depend on the nature and quantity of the material involved. While in most cases orders would be for the disposal of the radioactive material to a licensed facility, in very unusual circumstances a destruction order could be made. This would not necessarily require the destruction of the radioactive material but of the instrument or machinery which contains it in order to facilitate the safe disposal of the radioactive material. The courts would be able to seek advice from any number of organisations, including the Department of the Environment, the Health and Safety Executive, the National Radiological Protection Board and the Department of Transport, on the appropriate disposal methods.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Haberdashers' Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice has been given by his Department to the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college on the steps it would be appropriate to take to comply with the requirement in its funding agreement that the intake of pupils should be representative in all respects of the community in the area in which the college is situated.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the college to ensure that all requirements of the funding agreement, including those relating to admissions, are met. Advice is available as necessary.

Publicity Budget (Ethnic Publications)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what budget his Department has for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines the services and responsibilities of his Department; and what amount of money has been spent on this publicity in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The Department does not have a specific budget for advertising in the ethnic press and has not spent any funds on this activity in each of the last five years. However, it will shortly be advertising in the ethnic press two publications "How is your child doing at school?" and "Your child's report" which are available in eight ethnic languages. The Department has also published, in the last five years, other leaflets and guides in ethnic languages.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent estimate has been made of the number of students in England who give up courses in further and higher education colleges due to financial difficulties.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not available for further and higher education generally. A survey of all polytechnics and colleges in England identified only 0·2 per cent. of first degree students who did not continue their studies from the first to second year because of financial reasons.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of schools which have now achieved grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A total of 200 schools have now voted in favour of seeking grant-maintained status. We have approved 88 and rejected 13. Fifty-four schools have published proposals which will soon come to us for decision. Forty-five schools are currently committed to publish proposals following parental ballots in favour of seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the addresses of all schools which have achieved grant-maintained status, listed in his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) of 12 June, Official Report, column 532-36.

Mr. Eggar: I shall write to my hon. Friend. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Church Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the additional public funding Church schools would receive if they were all grant maintained, over and above what they are currently receiving.

Mr. Eggar: It is not possible to give a specific figure. Church schools which become grant maintained are eligible to receive a one-off transitional grant, various special purpose grants and a formula capital allocation. Some of these replace benefits or services which LEA-maintained schools are eligible to receive in another way. Such schools are also to be eligible to bid for 100 per cent. funding of named capital building projects. The amount received will depend on whether the bid is successful.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many church schools have applied for grant-maintained status; and how many have received it.

Mr. Eggar: To date, 14 Church schools have applied for grant-maintained status. Of these, we have approved eight, rejected one and have yet to decide the remaining five.

Special Needs

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action is being taken by his Department to ensure that local education authorities are assessing all children in their areas with special educational needs and are issuing formal statements describing their specific requirements.

Mr. Fallon: It is for LEAs to decide on the provision to be made for children in their areas with special educational needs. Parents have rights of appeal and complaint under the Education Act 1981 and the Education Act 1944 respectively. These provide safeguards against any avoidance by LEAs of their statutory obligations.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 17, whether any funds were invested in improving energy efficiency in 1990-91, apart from double glazing at Waterloo.

Mr. Atkins: A small amount—under £1,000—was spent in the 1990-91 financial year on roof insulation in one of our Darlington offices.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Performing Rights Society

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the time and cost involved for music users in appealing to the Copyright Tribunal agency in respect of tariffs imposed on them by the Performing Rights Society.

Mr. Leigh: The basic fee for an application to the Copyright Tribunal to settle a dispute with a copyright licensing body such as the Performing Rights Society is £30. The overall cost will depend on several factors including the level of any legal representation the applicant may choose to employ and the degree to which the application is successful. In appropriate cases, the tribunal may direct the licensing body to repay charges already paid under a new tariff and to pay the applicant's costs.

Road Surfacing Industry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will institute an inquiry into allegations of price-fixing in the road surfacing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Any alleged price-fixing in the road surfacing industry is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. Any evidence of possible anti-competitive agreements should be put to the director general.

Latin America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy in the GATT round of negotiations in helping the countries of Latin America and promoting policies conducive to ameliorating rain forest problems.

Mr. Sainsbury: The countries of Latin America, like other members of the GATT, would benefit from the improved market access for their products and the strengthening of the world trading system which would result from a successful conclusion to the Uruguay round of trade negotiations. The negotiations are not directly concerned with ameliorating rain-forest problems, but the GATT does allow the introduction of trade measures for conservation purposes, as long as these are not simply disguised restrictions on trade.

Radio Equipment

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider the need for radio amateurs to have to present equipment for type approval.

Mr. Redwood: Type approval is not considered appropriate for the amateur service as, in essence, it is to do with experimentation, self-training in communication and technical investigation. To require amateur equipment to be type approved would be unreasonably expensive and could stifle development.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Radiocommunications Agency will acquire a computerised and up-to-date database for type approval records.

Mr. Redwood: The Radiocommunications Agency, formerly the radiocommunications division of the DTI, has operated a computerised database for land mobile type approval records since 1983.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what circumstances account for the issue by the Radiocommunications Agency of a fact sheet on 16 May 1991, Ref. LPD/1/15, "All Parties Interested in Radio Car Alarms", quoting incorrect type approvals for vehicle security; how many letters he received pointing out the errors in the previous fact sheet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Radiocommunications Agency has had a continuing publicity campaign to discourage the sale, installation and use of radio security alarms for vehicles which are not approved to the Department's performance specification.

The latest in a series of letters to the trade dated 16 May 1991, covering a list of type approved equipment, was issued because the previous letter on the subject dated 1 February 1990 needed to be brought up to date. The Department has no record of letters pointing out errors in the lists attached to the 1 February letter. Regrettably, however, some errors have come to light in the revised lists attached to the 16 May 1991 letter. The agency intends to reissue the lists shortly in a clearer form.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Radiocommunications Agency expects to reply to the faxes from Scope Marketing (Communications UK) Ltd., Totnes, of 25 April, 1, 14, 20 and 28 May.

Mr. Redwood: Replies to the faxes from Scope Marketing (Communications UK) Ltd. were sent on 16 May, 21 May and 7 June.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 3 June.

Mr. Redwood: The main item for discussion was the European Commission's plans for applying multiplexed analogue components standards to direct broadcasting by satellite. The discussion, on the basis of an oral report by the Commission, revealed wide differences of view between those member states which wish to impose MAC standards quickly and with few exceptions, and those including most particularly the United Kingdom, who would wish to let the market decide whether existing PAL transmissions should be replaced. The United Kingdom expressed dismay at the Commission's initial proposals which would force broadcasters to act in a way that may not be consistent with their commercial judgment and would risk cutting growth in demand for satellite TV by imposing unnecessary costs on consumers. The Commission is now reflecting on the discussion and is expected to issue its final proposals very soon.

The otherwise relatively light agenda included an interim report from the Commission on the response to its green paper on satellite communications, and a report on progress towards publication of a green paper on postal services in Europe. The Commission also presented its proposal for harmonising the international telephony access code.

A final decision was taken to adopt a directive on the frequency bands to be reserved for digital European cordless telecommunications—DECT—and a recommendation on the co-ordinated introduction of DECT in the Community. In view of the outstanding budgetary concerns on the part of some member states, including the United Kingdom, the adoption of the proposed Council decision establishing the second phase of the TEDIS programme—trade electronics data interchange systems—was deferred.

Mental Nursing Homes

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the names and addresses of all those mental nursing homes registered to take detained patients together with the names of the registering authority.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

A list of mental nursing homes reported by district health authorities as being registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984 to receive patients liable to be detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the names and district health authorities of all mental nursing homes or other establishments which are not hospitals where detained patients have been cared for during the past three years under contractual arrangements with health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not collected centrally.

Knitwear and Textiles

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received from the industry about imports of category 13 (knickers and briefs) from China, category 12 (socks) from Indonesia and category 68 (knitted babywear) from Thailand;

(2) if he will give details of the movements in the levels of imports between 1989 and 1990 into the United Kingdom of category 13 (knickers and briefs) from China, category 12 (socks) from Indonesia and category 68 (knitted babywear) from Thailand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 June 1991]: Import figures are given in the table. My Department has received, and is considering, representations from the Knitting Industries' Federation Ltd.—KIF—calling for a repeat of the action taken in 1989 to ban imports of category 13 products originating in China and entering the United Kingdom on free circulation from other member states. Consultations with importing and retailing interests show these to be either opposed to or doubtful about the case for such a ban, in the absence of more precise information.

The KIF has also asked for safeguard action under the multi-fibre arrangements to be invoked against direct imports of category 12 products from Indonesia and category 68 products from Thailand.

My Department is considering the case for an application to the European Commission for a further ban on free circulation imports of category 13 products originating in China. The key criterion laid down by the Commission in such cases is whether the imports in question give rise to economic difficulties. My officials are studying some further information on this point recently supplied by the KIF.

In respect of category 12 products, United Kingdom production—of mainly higher-value items—has remained stable and exports have moved back to high levels. On category 68 products, United Kingdom production, exports and consumption are rising. Therefore, the MFA criterion for safeguard action for these products has not been met and my officials have informed the KIF accordingly.

Country and Product	Imports (including Imports in free circulation)
	1990	1989
China
Knickers, briefs etc. (MFA Category 13)	81·7 million pieces	51·2 million pieces
Indonesia
Socks etc. (MFA Category 12)	12·2 million pairs	12·5 million pairs
Thailand
Babies' Clothing (MFA Category 68)	1,573 tonnes	1,229 tonnes

Local Offices

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the future of the Thames South, Southwark, Kennington, Peckham, Camberwell and Dartford offices of his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of social security offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the population of London's adults were receiving income support (a) in 1980, (b) in 1985, (c) in 1990 and (d) at the last date for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. I understand from him that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals claimed for income support in 1988 and each succeeding year as a result of being refused unemployment benefit.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available. However, the numbers of people refused unemployment benefit to whom income support was in payment on particular days are shown in the table[1].

Unemployed claimants not receiving unemployment benefit

	Income support in payment
12 May 1988	1,254,415
10 November 1988	1,065,932
11 May 1989	997,044
9 November 1989	918,934

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people in 1991-92 who pay national insurance contributions on earnings above the lower earnings limit but who are not liable to income tax.

Mr. Jack: Based on information from the family expenditure survey 1989, it is estimated that in 1991-92 some 0·4 million non-tax payers in the United Kingdom will have earnings above the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions.

Marginal Withdrawal Rates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) tax units and (b) individuals had a marginal withdrawal rate of (i) 50 to 59 per cent., (ii) 60 to 69 per cent., (iii) 70 to 79 per cent., (iv) 80 to 89 per cent., (v) 90 to 99 per cent. and (vi) over 100 per cent. in each year since 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Such information as is available is contained in the table. Figures for 1985-86 are not available in the form requested. Information for 1986-87 and 1987-88 is not available.

Number of heads of benefits units facing marginal deduction rates by range (in thousands)

Per cent.	1985-86	Per cent.	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
90+	130	90-99+	45	45	45	50
80+	290	80-89+	300	165	190	145
70+	290	70-79+	170	205	160	195
60+	450	60-69+	•	5	5	5
50+	680	50-59+	0	5	0	0
40+	n/a	40-49+	70	35	270	20

Notes:
1. Figures are based on pooled family expenditure survey data. Those for 1985-86 are cumulative and those for 1991-92 are estimated.
2. Calculated for benefit units in receipt of income related benefits where at least one partner works 24 hours per week or more.
3. • represents a figure of less than 2,500.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the marginal withdrawal rate out of gross income in 1990-91 for those in work, paying tax and national insurance contributions and claiming rent and community charge rebates; and how many people there were in such households.

Mr. Jack: The marginal deduction rate in 1990-91 for those in work, paying tax and national insurance contributions and in receipt of rent rebate and community charge benefit is 87 per cent. This assumes national insurance contributions are paid at the contracted-in rate. Estimates of the number of people in households subject to marginal deduction rates in 1990-91 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) tax units and (b) persons, including children, in the households affected face a marginal withdrawal rate of tax and benefit of over 70 per cent.; and if he will state the estimated income ranges over which marginal withdrawal rates of (i) 70 to 79 per cent., (ii) 80 to 89 per cent. and (iii) 90 to 99 per cent. apply in 1990-91.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available in the form requested. In 1990-91 there were 395,000 heads of benefit units receiving income-related benefits where at least one partner worked more than 24 hours a week with marginal deduction rates of 70 per cent. or over.

Unemployment

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the cost to the Exchequer per 100,000 unemployed in terms of social security payments.

Mr. Jack: A variation of 100,000 in the number unemployed incurs an estimated additional expenditure of £305 million in social security benefits available to unemployed people in 1991-92.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Horses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his Ministry differentiates between horses used for recreation and those kept for the horsemeat trade.

Mr. Maclean: No such differentiation is made. In this country any horse can be slaughtered for the horsemeat trade providing it is slaughtered in accordance with the requirements of public health legislation.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what facilities exist in the United Kingdom for the slaughter of equines for human consumption; and if he has any proposals to improve them.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently four EC-approved slaughterhouses, and six slaughterhouses operating under domestic legislation, which are approved for the slaughter of equines in the United Kingdom. It is for the operators of the domestic plants to take commercial decisions on whether to upgrade to meet the single market rules which will apply after 1992.

New Forest

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual cost to the Forestry Commission for supervising hunting in the New Forest; and how many letters and petitions in favour of ending hunting in the New Forest the Forestry Commission has received in the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The Forestry Commission does not keep a separate record of the cost of supervising hunting in the New Forest as the staff concerned cover a wide range of duties of which supervising hunting forms only a small part. However, the Commission's best estimate is that the costs last year, including staff and vehicle costs, were in the region of £11,000. In the last five years the Commission has received one petition and about 50 letters objecting to hunting in the New Forest.

Wild Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responsibilities his Department has for (i) conservation, (ii) transport and (iii) welfare of imported wild birds.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has no conservation responsibilities in respect of imported wild birds. During transport, the welfare of birds imported into this country is protected by the provisions of the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973 which also imposes a general duty of care on those involved in the transport of all animals including birds.

The order is enforced by local authorities. Their inspectors can call on the assistance of the state veterinary service whenever welfare or health problems arise. Every commercial consignment of birds imported into this country is inspected on arrival with particular regard to welfare conditions.

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Maclean: Various parts of the Department, such as staff training, welfare and the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, purchase specialist video programmes from time to time. However, these purchases are made independently. There is no central purchasing point, and no central records are kept.

Bananas

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the continuation of Commonwealth preference for bananas; what is the current state of negotiations within the EC on bananas; what is the position of the United Kingdom Government in these discussions; if he will give consideration to the need to protect the interest of Commonwealth banana growers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We have received representations about the preferential arrangements applying to United Kingdom imports of bananas from a wide variety of interests including our traditional suppliers in the Caribbean.

The European Commission is currently considering arrangements to apply to bananas in the single European market post-1992, but has not yet come forward with proposals. The United Kingdom Government will seek to ensure that new arrangements fulfil our commitments to Commonwealth Caribbean suppliers, and take account of consumer interests, the need for budgetary restraint, trade policy considerations and the competition and efficiency objectives of the single market initiative.

Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from beekeepers about the present scale of oil seed rape production or its present methods of cultivation.

Mr. Maclean: There is a good market for oil seed rape honey, and the information available to me indicates clearly that this source is consequently valued by beekeepers.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 42, when he expects the 1990-91 energy consumption figures to be available.

Mr. Curry: The energy consumption figures for the 1990-91 financial year should be available within about a month. I will write to the hon. Member with the details as soon as it has been possible to gather the information together from all the various Ministry establishments concerned.

Blue-Ear Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pig weaners have been removed out of the farms restricted due to blue-ear disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No weaners have been moved off restricted farms.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pig buyers from (a) Holland and (b) Germany visited farms which are currently under restriction in the last three months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: On 25 April 1991, a party from the eastern part of Germany visited two of the premises now under restrictions imposed under precautions for dealing with blue-eared pig disease. The visitors, seven Germans and a Dutchman, had not been in contact with any pigs for at least a week prior to the visit and very strict hygiene standards were applied on their arrival, including a shower and changes of inner and outer clothing. In view of the precautions taken and the absence of the disease in the eastern part of Germany, this visit has been discounted as the origin of infection of blue-ear pig disease.

Wine

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made towards setting up a quality wine scheme for English and Welsh wine producers under European Community rules.

Mr. Curry: During the recent price-fixing round in Brussels, we secured a formal Council statement that reads:

"In the context of wine sector reform the Commission will study the possibilities of including interspecific varieties in the list of varieties deemed suitable for production of quality wine per specified region".

I expect English and Welsh wine producers to welcome this, as interspecific varieties of vines, or "hybrids", emerged as their predominant concern during a recent consultation exercise on quality wine. Clearly we now have a commitment to follow this point up firmly in subsequent Brussels discussion, which may take some time. Meanwhile, however, I have decided to launch a pilot quality wine scheme for operation as from the 1991 vintage this autumn, with a view to full operation as of the 1992 vintage.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the total number of households which applied for shares in the privatisation of (a) the regional electricity distribution companies, (b) the generating companies and (c) both.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It will not be possible to give a figure for the number of households from which applications were received, since the applications do not record the composition of the household to which an applicant belongs.

Trawsfynydd Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of running Trawsfynydd nuclear power station in 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric.

Electricity Pylons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy in respect of siting electricity pylons in areas of high population density.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Siting of electricity pylons is, in the first instance, a matter for the licence holder concerned. However, the majority of overhead line developments require the consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, and he takes all relevant factors, including the extent of any residential development, fully into account before reaching his decision.

The Gulf

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his assessment of the effect of the war in the Gulf on oil inputs into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The United Kingdom was able to acquire adequate supplies of oil despite the disruptions caused by the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait.

Thermonuclear Reactor Project

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the discussions on the international thermonuclear experimental reactor project, and the steps to be taken to move to the engineering design phase of the collaboration, between Euratom, the United States of America, Japan and the USSR.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Negotiations on behalf of the Community are being conducted by the Commission. So far there have been two plenary rounds of discussions aimed at deciding whether the collaboration should proceed to an engineering design activity—EDA—phase. The last of these took place in Tokyo in April; a third round is scheduled for Washington in July. Consideration is focusing on the technology content of the project and on the choice of site. Three of the partners in the collaboration, Japan, the United States of America, and Euratom, have proposed sites for the location of EDA, and these bids are currently being evaluated.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future funding arrangements for the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Parliament has voted some £27 million for the Energy Efficiency Office in support of energy efficiency in low-income households in the current financial year, of which approximately £26 million is expected to be used to fund the home energy efficiency scheme. Funding in future years will be settled and announced under the usual arrangements for public expenditure.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Latin America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what study he has made of the United States framework for dealing with Latin America for the development of overall packages to Latin America in relation to science and technology.

Mrs. Chalker: We are aware of no such framework. Congress is presently considering a Bill which, if enacted, would promote co-operation between the United States and Latin America in science and technology. We are aware of its provisions.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards using the Commonwealth Development Corporation as a pump-primer for investment in Latin America.

Mrs. Chalker: The Commonwealth Development Corporation has an important role to play in stimulating wider investment in those countries in Latin America and elsewhere in which it operates.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy he has for helping to expand the Inter-American Development Corporation.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is a shareholder in the Inter-American development bank—IADB—but is not a member of the Inter-American Investment Corporation. We play a full part in the activities of the IADB and contribute to its fund for special operations.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Brazil on bio-medical research.

Mrs. Chalker: No such discussions have taken place. ODA funds are provided for higher education links between Brazil and the United Kingdom. These include some areas of medical and health-related research.

Aid Recipients

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria for good government he uses in determining appropriate recipients of aid.

Mrs. Chalker: The criteria for good government include sound economic and social policies, competent, open and accountable institutions and respect for human rights and the rule of law.

Central America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy for extending Commonwealth Development Corporation work in (a) Costa Rica, (b) Ecuador, (c) Nicaragua and (d) Honduras.

Mrs. Chalker: The Commonwealth Development Corporation already provides assistance to Costa Rica, Ecuador and Honduras. Approval for the corporation to operate in Nicaragua was given in March this year, and the CDC is currently investigating a number of investment opportunities there. In pursuing all such opportunities the CDC seeks to increase the proportion of new commitments in the private sector.

Aid Programme

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any comprehensive survey of British attitudes towards overseas aid and development has been carried out since "Attitudes to Overseas Aid" published by HMSO in 1978; and whether he will make it his policy to commission another such survey.

Mrs. Chalker: Questions on the public's attitude to aid are included in the annual FCO opinion poll. We also receive information from polls conducted by non-government organisations. We will continue to use both these methods to gauge public opinion of the aid programme.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have entered, or been reinstated, in the aid programme since 1979; and why.

Mrs. Chalker: Since 1979 the following countries have entered the aid programme:
Central African Republic
Equitorial Guinea

Guinea
Recognition of their classification as least-developed countries.

China
To support improvements in Sino-British relations, increasing Chinese interests in links with western countries and systems and in recognition of China's place among the world's 50 poorest countries.

Comoros
Israel
Mongolia
Sao Tome
Aid limited to minor gifts under the heads of mission schemes to non-governmental or voluntary bodies.

Congo
Gabon
English language teaching programmes designed to strengthen British political and commercial links with west Africa.

The following countries have been reinstated into the aid programme since 1979:

Cambodia
Humanitarian aid.

Cuba
Surinam
Aid limited to minor gifts under the heads of mission schemes to non-governmental or voluntary bodies.

Iran
Iraq
Emergency aid to Iraqi refugees.

Nicaragua
Bilateral aid reinstated in April 1990 to mark return to democracy. Previously only disaster relief and minor gifts under the heads of mission schemes.

Vietnam
Assistance through British NGOs for the reintegration of boat people and for general development assistance.

Turkey

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds Turkey qualifies as a recipient of bilateral aid.

Mrs. Chalker: Turkey is classified as a developing country by the development assistance committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Development Issues

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each year since 1975, the number of Overseas Development Administration professional staff based overseas in development divisions, in embassies and elsewhere, showing how many of these are environmental specialists, agriculturalists, social advisers and other technical staff.

Mrs. Chalker: Information in the form requested is not available before 1983. Details of ODA permanent staff based overseas are as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Agriculturalists	9	8	8	8	9	9	9	8	10
Social advisers	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1
Other technical staff	18	20	21	20	20	20	21	20	20

Staff on contract to the ODA funded by the Aid Programme:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Agriculturalists	n/a	n/a	136	161	137	183	188	184	154
Environmental specialists	na/	n/a	29	44	52	61	73	78	75
Social advisers	n/a	n/a	131	145	147	146	146	146	125
Other technical staff	n/a	n/a	1,138	1,093	1,061	1,191	1,127	1,264	1,115

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Overseas Development Administration's policy regarding the responsibility of Overseas Development Administration staff working overseas to liaise with non-governmental organisations in those countries; and whether any staff are posted with the specific responsibility of liaising with local non-governmental organsiations.

Mrs. Chalker: We encourage our staff working overseas to get to know, and co-operate with, other agencies operating in the countries concerned, including both local and United Kingdom-based NGOs. At present there are two ODA posts, one in Bangladesh and one in Pakistan, with a specific remit to liaise directly with local NGOs.

New Aid Projects

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made to increase the amount of time spent by Overseas Development Administration staff overseas in identifying new aid projects, particularly poverty projects, in Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Poverty alleviation is a major objective for the aid programme and a significant proportion of staff time in headquarters and overseas is already devoted to identifying, appraising and monitoring projects and programmes which contribute to this. New staff appointments also reflect this emphasis. For example, a new social development adviser post has recently been created in headquarters to help deal with Africa. Overseas, an additional economist has been appointed to the British development division in southern Africa specifically to work in the health and education sectors.

Project Costs

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Overseas Development Administration's policy regarding the financing of recurrent costs of projects.

Mrs. Chalker: Recurrent costs are met, where possible, from the budget of the local agency undertaking the project or programme which our aid is helping to finance. However, in certain circumstances, we are ready to consider financing recurrent costs through the aid programme. In making judgments we would consider whether there is a genuine shortage of local funds, whether recurrent costs and revenues have been carefully considered and whether sectoral policies are appropriate; also whether the nature of the proposal, for example if it has a pilot or demonstration purpose, presented special justification for contributions to local costs.

NGO Grants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many indigenous non-governmental organisations in developing countries receive grants from the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: This information is not centrally available. Many developing country NGOs receive grants for specific projects from United Kingdom heads of missions through the gifts schemes and small project schemes which they administer for ODA. In addition, grants to British NGOs through the ODA's joint funding scheme are often destined for projects designed and implemented in conjunction with indigenous NGOs, and sometimes spread across a number of countries.

Technical Co-operation

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether technical co-operation has ever been given to assist a developing country to assess the poverty impact of its own policies.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration is providing technical co-operation funds to the Government of Mozambique to employ a social policy adviser to help analyse poverty incidence and advise on poverty policies. In Kenya and Bangladesh, technical co-operation funds are paying for consultants to work with the Governments to analyse poverty incidence and to suggest options for aid assistance.

Social Development Advisers

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many social development advisers there are in the Overseas Development Administration in the United Kingdom; how many are overseas; and in which country.

Mrs. Chalker: There are four full-time social development advisers and one assistant adviser in the United Kingdom. There is one full-time adviser in Thailand and one part time adviser in Barbados. In addition Her Majesty's Government fund 125 social advisers—this includes those in medical health, community development and social welfare—under the aid programme in 29 countries.

Aid Projects

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of Overseas Development Administration projects that have been evaluated have been successfully operating more than two years after completion of the aid contract and withdrawal of Overseas Development Administration financing.

Mrs. Chalker: Evaluation of a project normally takes place after sufficient time has elapsed to permit an assessment of operational success. The timing depends upon the nature of the project, and on occasion may be less than two years after completion. An analysis of 79 projects evaluated between 1980 and 1989 showed that 43 of them —56·2 per cent. by value—were rated successful or highly successful. A further 23—31 per cent. by value—were rated partially successful and the remainder—12·8 per cent. by value—were rated unsuccessful. This analysis is contained in the report "Lessons from Evaluation 1980-1989" which is available in the House of Commons Library.

(2) if he will make an estimate of the manpower costs involved in retraining police officers necessitated by the passage of (a) the Road Traffic Bill and (b) the Criminal Justice Bill.

To ease the pressure on Hong Kong, we are pursuing as a matter of urgency with Vietnam, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organisation of Migration the establishment of an internationally managed centre on territory provided by Vietnam for those asylum seekers who are determined not to be refugees and have not taken advantage of the existing voluntary return programme.

Animal Carcases

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has monitored, by council area, the incidence of illegal dumping of fallen animals which has had to be dealt with by individual councils; and what are the statistics for each of the past eight months in each council area.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 June 1991]: District councils are being asked for the information requested and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases have been prosecuted or have prosecutions pending in relation to the illegal dumping of fallen animals during each of the past eight months.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 June 1991]: Records of prosecutions by district councils for the illegal dumping of fallen animals are not held centrally. However, information on such dumping including information on prosecutions is being sought from district councils and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

20. Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were in employment in Scotland in 1979; and how many are now.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In December 1990, the latest date for which information is available, there were 2·27 million in the Scottish civilian work force, some 20,000 more than in December 1979.

Scottish Homes

21. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with Scottish Homes about the transfer of its housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have issued guidance to Scottish Homes regarding the disposal of its housing stock and proposals which have the agreement of tenants are subject to my approval. No proposals have yet been submitted for approval.

22. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding arrangements he has made to enable Scottish Homes to meet its target of 300 new units of special needs accommodation as part of its second strategic plan.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes finances special needs accommodation provided by housing associations from within its traditional rented programme, which in 1990-91 was approximately £149 million.

Plant Closures, Leith

24. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from trade unions, local councils and community groups about the closure of Caledonia Mills and Scottish Agricultural Industries in Leith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no representations about Caledonia Mills. The hon. Gentleman will recall that one trade union representative attended the meeting I had with him on 20 March 1991 about Scottish Agricultural Industries—SAI. No other such representations have been received about SAI.

Lanarkshire Health Services

25. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the provision of general hospital services within the Lanarkshire health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On Friday, 7 June my right hon. Friend endorsed Lanarkshire health board's proposal in its acute services strategy to build a new 615-bed district general hospital in Wishaw at a cost of over £70 million to serve the Motherwell and Clydesdale area. The other component of the board's acute services strategy is to provide a new district general hospital to serve the Hamilton and East Kilbride districts by either redeveloping the existing Hairmyres hospital site or by building a new district general hospital at Blantyre.

I visited Lanarkshire on Monday 17 June to see for myself the sites involved and to hear at first hand the various arguments in favour of each of the options. I shall make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Local Government Reform

26. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has had about the constitutional arrangements between Scotland and Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

NHS Trusts

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been submitted for self-governing trust status for hospitals and other national health service units.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Applications have been submitted by the South Ayrshire group of hospitals and by the Royal Scottish national hospital. A third application, from Foresterhill, is expected shortly.

Tourism

29. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of overseas visitors to Scotland this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: It is not possible at this early stage of the season to provide an accurate estimate. The Scottish tourist board expects a downturn in visitor numbers from north America but expects this to be offset by a continued increase in visitors from the EC and Japan.

Lanarkshire Working Party

30. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the report of the Lanarkshire working party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 7 June, at columns 379-82.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of primary school education in the highlands is a matter for Highland regional council as education authority.

Health Staff Morale

34. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairmen of Scottish health boards to discuss staff morale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I last met health board chairmen on 3 May 1991.

West Coast Fishermen

35. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the condition of the west coast fishing industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the year to 31 March 1991 a total of 1,515 patients received heart bypass operations. The mean waiting time was six months. I have already announced that I expect to increase funding for open heart surgery, which includes heart bypass operations,* to around £19·8 million in 1991-92.

Preventive Medicine

38. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for promoting preventive medicine in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The importance the Government attach to preventive medicine was reflected in our White Paper "Promoting Better Health" Cmnd 249 published in November 1987. This stressed the need to shift the emphasis in primary care from the treatment of illness to the promotion of health and the prevention of disease. The new GP contract, which was introduced in April 1990, furthered this approach by actively encouraging immunisation and screening programmes and the provision of health promotion clinics. The benefits are already apparent and the attainment of targets has been impressive.

A related review of health education in Scotland which I commissioned in 1989 culminated on 25 March this year when I published the document "Health Education in Scotland: A National Policy Statement", copies of which have been placed in the Library. This statement reflects the importance which the Government place on the promotion of good health and identifies priorities and sets targets for the improvement of health in Scotland. It also describes the role of the new Health Education Board for Scotland and sets out the framework within which it will work together with health boards, local authorities, voluntary organisations, employers, the media and individuals, to secure the health improvements we seek. In addition, I expect to take further initiatives which will be announced in due course.

Inward Investment

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of total United Kingdom inward investment was made in Scotland in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: According to the figures recorded by the Invest in Britain Bureau, in 1990 Scotland attracted 11·5 per cent. of the total number of inward investment projects coming to the United Kingdom, and 36 per cent. of planned new jobs.

Adult Education

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy toward the protection of adult basic education units in the Lothian region from the effects of charge-capping.

Community Charge

23. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the operation of the community charge reduction scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The scheme has backdated effect in Scotland to 1 April 1990, although different rules apply in the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92. A number of local authorities have already issued revised bills, taking account of reductions under the scheme in respect of both years, and most others expect to complete this task by the summer.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of community charge payable by each eligible adult in a household of one, two, three, four or five adults where one, two or no adults have been exempted due to severe mental handicap in 1991-92 after the community charge reduction scheme has been applied, for each level of assumed rates in £50 bands from £150 to £500, in £100 bands from £500 to £1,500, £1,750 and £2,000, where in each case the community charge is set at each £10 increment between £140 and £600.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 12 June.

Fish Farming

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review the role of the Crown Estate as a quasi-planning authority in marine fish farming.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have accepted the view of the Select Committee on Agriculture that the system of regulation of the marine fish farming industry should develop in an evolutionary manner. The Scottish Office is currently preparing revised guidance on the location and siting of marine fish farms in consultation with the Crown Estate and other relevant interests. This guidance will examine carefully the environmental impact of marine fish farms and will set out clearly the parameters within which the industry should develop in the future.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many unauthorised emissions of leachate have taken place from landfill waste sites to the environment in Scotland over the last five years; and if he will provide details of where they have taken place and the names of the site owners;

(2) how many formal compliance notices have been issued by waste disposal authorities to landfill waste site operators in Scotland, together with details of why these notices were served and the names of the site operators concerned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the river purification authorities and the district and island councils, which have statutory responsibility for these matters.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases there have been of pollution of water courses and drinking water supplies by leachate from landfill waste sites in Scotland during the past five years, with details of the extent and source of pollution and the names of the site owners responsible.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: River purification authorities are responsible for investigating any incidents of water pollution by leachate. Information on incidents is contained in their annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library.

Public drinking water supplies in Scotland are unlikely to be affected by leachate from landfill sites and no reports of such incidents have been received since 21 December 1990 when the water authorities were first required formally to report significant failures of drinking water quality in public supplies. Prior to that date, comprehensive information about incidents of this nature was not held centrally.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the figures on the number of requests by prisoners for transfer to Northern Ireland which he notified to the Northern Ireland Office in each year since 1980, broken down on the basis of permanent and temporary transfers.

DEFENCE

Public Appointments

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to "Public Bodies 1990" issued by the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service in December 1990; pages 12 to 14 list Ministry of Defence appointments and their remuneration. Further relevant information on salaries and the duration of appointments is included in "Public Appointments: A Handbook of Women's Organisations", pages 31 to 37, published by the Women's National Commission. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The production of a complete list of the titles of video recordings purchased by the Department could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is estimated, however, that the total number of titles purchased since the beginning of 1990 is some 2,000.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the contravention by a jet military aircraft flying at less than 1,000 ft over the village of Thurnscoe, South Yorkshire at approximately 1130 hours on 3 June, of the low flying transit area;

(2) if he will make a statement in respect of the pair of military jet aircraft that flew at less than 1,000 ft between the villages of Clayton and Hooton Pagnell, South Yorkshire at approximately 1655 hours on 22 May;

(3) if he will make a statement in respect of a low-flying military jet aircraft entering a prohibited low-flying transit area over Clayton, South Yorkshire on 9 June at approximately (a) 1509 hours and (b) 1617 hours.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: If the hon. Member would care to write to me with further details I should be happy to consider them.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the aims and objectives of the low flying exercise Trident Eagle held in May; what types and numbers of aircraft were involved; how many complaints were received in respect of noise and low flying, and from what locations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Exercise Trident Eagle was an aviation battlegroup exercise undertaken by 9 Army Air Corps Regiment designed to practise airmobile operations and procedures. The numbers and types of aircraft which took part in the exercise were as follows:

Seven Gazelle
12 Lynx
Two Puma

Seven complaints were received in all, from the following locations:

Horncastle, Lincolnshire
Louth, Lincolnshire (two)
Rothwell, Lincolnshire
Wragby, Lincolnshire
Benniworth, Lincolnshire
Dunnington, North Yorkshire

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The amount spent on official hospitality by the Ministry of Defence in 1989-90 totalled some £3·7 million, in 1990-91 £3·9 million, and in 1991-92, to 31 May, £0·4 million. These figures include expenditure incurred by the Ministry of Defence itself, by formations and establishments of the armed forces at home and abroad, and by individual officers occupying command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances are payable.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the APHAZ that occurred on 4 July 1989, reported by a controller when a Tornado infringed the Humberside airport zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The three aircraft involved were flying at heights of between approximately 1,500 and 2,000 ft, and the incident was assessed as category C—no risk of collision.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the air miss on 27 November 1989, involving an SA365 helicopter and two A10s holding for Donna Nook range area; what were the findings of the joint airmiss working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aircraft involved were flying at heights of between approximately 2,000 and 2,500 ft, and the air miss was assessed as category C—no risk of collision. The joint airmiss working group concluded that one of the A10 pilots flew sufficiently close to the helicopter to cause its pilot concern for the safety of his aircraft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the air miss in August, 1988 involving a Cherokee and some A10s near the Cowden range; what were the findings of the joint airmiss working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aircraft involved were flying at a height of approximately 2,500 ft and the air miss was assessed as category C—no risk of collision. The joint airmiss working group concluded that the Cherokee pilot had inadvertently penetrated the Cowden weapons range danger area.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the air miss on 22 November 1989 involving an S76 helicopter and a USAF F111 in the Rough gas field area; what were the findings of the joint airmiss working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aircraft involved were flying at heights of between approximately 700 and 1,000 ft, and the air miss was assessed as category B—possible risk of collision. The joint airmiss working group concluded that the cause of the air miss was the failure of the F111 pilot to see the helicopter in time to give adequate way, compounded by the failure of the helicopter pilot to fly at the recommended level.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the APHAZ reported by a controller on 15 August 1989 when a Tornado aircraft infringed the Humberside airport zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aircraft involved were flying at a height of approximately 700 ft, and the incident was assessed category C—no risk of collision.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the air miss on 10 May 1989, involving a foreign F16 and a S76 helicopter in the West Sole gas field area; what were the findings of the joint air miss working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aircraft involved were flying at a height of approximately 200 ft, and the air miss was assessed as category C—no risk of collision. The joint airmiss working group concluded that elements of the military aircraft formation had made an unauthorised penetration of the West Sole helicopter protection zone.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what was (a) the height and (b) the risk category of the air miss on 13 June 1990, involving a Bell 212 helicopter and a Tornado aircraft 25 miles east of the Humber estuary; what were the findings of the joint air miss working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aircraft involved were flying at a height of approximately 1,000 ft and the air miss was assessed category C—no risk of collision. The joint airmiss working group concluded that there had been a conflict of flightpaths.

Army Manpower

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing (a) the nominal manpower establishment, (b) the actual manpower strength, (c) the percentage of nominal establishment achieved, (d) the number of recruits becoming available each year, and (e) the rate of retention of recruits and trained soldiers for each regiment and division in the British Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Members for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) and for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) of 4 June, Official Report, column 143, how he proposes to make the decisions as to where and how manpower reductions in the Army will be imposed following the consultation process within the Army; and how he intends to reconcile conflicting interests within the Army and ensure a fair hearing for all interests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have asked the Army to bring forward proposals on how to achieve the restructuring set out by the Secretary of State in his answer of 4 June. Consultation will be widespread, including all regimental colonels and colonels commandant. I am confident that all interests will have a fair hearing and that the regimental system will show that it can adapt to change.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he expects to place an order for the replacement of Chieftain tanks before the summer recess; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of trainees who passed through the Royal Military Police Rousillon barracks in Chichester in 1990; and what numbers he anticipates entering training courses there in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1990-91, a total of 388 trainees entered the Royal Military Police training centre, Rousillon barracks, Chichester. Of these, 272 successfully completed their training. However, reflecting the RMP's healthy manning situation, only 150 are expected to enter training courses in 1991-92. It will be several months before recruit allocations are made for 1992-93.

Ministry Bases (Contaminated Land)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been agreed for the environmental clean-up and remedial work on contaminated land at Ministry of Defence-owned bases vacated or to be vacated by United States forces.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 21 January, Official Report, column 53.

The Gulf

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the eligibility for the general services medal of medical units from NATO countries which were attached to the British service units during the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Her Majesty the Queen has approved the award of a medal to recognise compaign service in the Gulf. However, decisions have still to be reached concerning the qualifying conditions for the medal, including the eligibility of non-British forces.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 131, what information he has available on energy consumption in the civil estate (a) for 1989-90 along the lines of the information given in his answer of 10 May 1990, Official Report, columns 213-14 and (b) for 1990 along the lines of the information given in his answer of 30 April 1990, Official Report, column 429.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The expenditure on energy consumption in the civil estate for financial year 1989-90, broken down by fuel, is as follows:

Thousands

Source	£
Liquid Fuel	455
Electricity	3,849
Gas	478
Utilities	430
	5,212

Figures relating to the consumption of energy are not readily available. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry will submit its report once its investigations are complete.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a lone parent with children below school age is eligible for employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Lone parents in receipt of income support on order books for at least 26 weeks are eligible to join the ET programme, provided that in each case the youngest child at the time of entry is in statutory full-time education. Lone parents who meet other eligibility conditions for ET can enter regardless of the age of their youngest child. Eligibility conditions are kept under regular review.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current arrangements and funding for employment training for ex-offenders.

Mr. Jackson: Ex-offenders fall within the normal eligibility rules for employment training and their time spent in custody or on remand counts towards the six months unemployment eligibility condition. No special funding is provided for ex-offenders as a group.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the qualifications in the north-east area that were achieved by clients for each year of employment training since its inception.

Mr. Jackson: The table gives the type of qualification or credit towards a qualification obtained by people who left employment training in the northern region between July 1989 and December 1990. Information prior to this period is not available.

Training

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people over 25 years and under 50 years were unemployed and not on the employment training scheme in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what is his latest estimate of the number of people over 25 and under 50 years who are currently unemployed and not on the employment training schemes or other training schemes being operated through the training and enterprise council and local enterprise company network;

(2) how many under-25s were unemployed and not on the employment training scheme in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what is his latest estimate of the number of under-25s currently unemployed and not on the employment training schemes or other training schemes being operated through the TEC and LEC network.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Those on job-related Government schemes are included in the employment estimates and are, therefore, not counted in the unemployment figures.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the funding block 3 budget allocation to all training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and to all local enterprise companies in Scotland for 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: Funding block 3 budgets for 1991-92 for each of the 75 operational TECs in England and Wales are set out in the table.

Responsibility for answering that part of the question which relates to the Scottish local enterprise companies lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many persons aged 16 years were in receipt of the £29·50 a week training allowance in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and how many are currently in receipt of this level of training allowance;

(2) how many persons aged 17 years were in receipt of the £35 a week training allowance in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and how many are currently in receipt of this level of training allowance;

(3) how much was spent in training allowances for persons aged 16 and 17 years, respectively, in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and how much money has been allocated to the training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies, for training allowances for persons aged 16 and 17 years respectively, in 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: Information on numbers of 16 and 17-year-old youth training—YT—trainees who receive minimum allowances of £29·50 and £35 per week respectively is not available. The Exchequer contribution towards trainee allowances cannot be separately identified because employers also contribute and a proportion of trainees are employed and receive wages. Expenditure on YT, including minimum allowances in allocations to training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies in 1991-92, will be some £844 million.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total budget in 1988-89 and 1989-90 for those programmes which are now the responsibility of training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies and are funded by the funding block 3 budget allocations.

Mr. Jackson: Expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90 on programmes which are broadly comparable to those now operated by training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies with block 3 funding, was as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	250

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the programmes his Department ran directly before the establishment of the training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and the local enterprise companies in Scotland, are now run by training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies and funded by the funding block 3 budget allocations.

Mr. Jackson: Block 3 broadly corresponds to business growth training and the enterprise allowance scheme which were previously run by my Department's area offices. Training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies have however been given a flexible remit to undertake business and enterprise activities in their area using this funding block.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he has taken to encourage businesses to provide training opportunities for employees aged 16 to 19 years in 1991; and what measures he is currently undertaking in that direction.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have put in place a wide range of measures to encourage businesses to train their 16 to 19-year-old employees. Youth training encourages employers to offer high quality training. Training credits are being offered on a pilot basis to further encourage young people moving into employment to train. The Government are supporting compacts in urban programme areas and similar areas in Scotland and Wales, under which local employers guarantee young people a job with training, or training leading to a job, in return for their working towards agreed goals. A new standard—investors in people—is being introduced to promote employer commitment to developing their employees, including young people.

Building on these measures, the comprehensive proposals in the recent White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" are designed to further increase training opportunities for young people, particularly through the nationwide extension of training credits, the expansion of the compacts approach, and improvements to the qualifications system.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people aged over 25 years and under 50 years were on the employment training scheme in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what is his latest estimate for the numbers of people aged over 25 years and under 50 years currently enrolled in the employment training schemes through the TEC and LEC network;

(2) how many under-25s were on the employment training scheme in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what is his latest estimate for the numbers of under-25s currently enrolled on the employment training schemes through the TEC and LEC network.

Mr. Jackson: Information about entrants to employment training in the age groups requested for 1989-90 and the latest available for 1990-91 is given in table 1. Information for those TECs operational during the period April-November 1990, the latest dates for which information is available, is given in table 2.

Departmental Programmes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) when and how widely full details of the United Kingdom operational programme for the now initiative will be made available to prospective applicants;

(2) when and how widely full details of the United Kingdom operational programme for the horizon programme will be made available to prospective applicants;

(3) when and how widely full details of the United Kingdom operational programme for the Euroform programme will be made available to prospective applicants.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 18 June 1991]: The numerous organisations that have registered an interest in these initiatives will all be sent the necessary details of the operational programme, including guidelines, procedures and timetable, and invited to apply.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) when applications for funding are to be invited for the now initiative; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when applications for funding are to be invited for the Euroform programme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when applications for funding are to be invited for the horizon programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Individual project applications will be invited following consultation with the European Commission on our operational programme. This is expected to be in the autumn.

Regulations

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many regulations made by him or his predecessors have been repealed in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. My Department is responsible for repealing and replacing several regulations each year concerning matters such as fee levels and compensation limits as well as looking at unnecessarily burdensome or outdated legislation.

We are firmly committed to reducing the burdens on business, which is reflected in my Department's aim of supporting economic growth by promoting a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market. We have made great progress in this area. In 1989 for example we abolished the national dock labour scheme, thereby eliminating restrictive working practices in the docks. The Employment Act 1989 removed a number of unnecessary measures which served as constraints on employment, in particular inappropriate barriers to the employment of women and young people. The Employment Act 1990 outlawed the pre-entry closed shop.

The Health and Safety Executive continues to replace over-detailed and inflexible health and safety legislation with more modern and comprehensive provisions. A prime example is the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 which replaced some 350 individual regulations with an up-to-date framework of regulation for the protection of employee health.

All new legislative proposals, including those from the European Commission, will continue to be assessed for their impact on business and we shall ensure that burdens on business are minimised where possible.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals were disqualified from unemployment benefit for the maximum 26 weeks under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 in each of the last five years (a) in Wales as a whole and (b) in each county or district in Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Job Clubs

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent in 1989-90 and 1990-91 on job clubs; and how much is planned to be spent on job clubs in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: I have been advised by officials in the Employment Service that in the year 1989-90 expenditure on job clubs, excluding marketing of the programme, totalled £24·4 million. In 1990-91 expenditure was £25 million.

Current planned expenditure for 1991-92, excluding marketing, is £27·5 million. The level of expenditure for 1992-93 is the subject of the current public expenditure survey negotiations with Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to reduce the requirement that people who are eligible to join a job club have to have been out of work for six months or more unless they are disabled or have been on employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Job clubs are aimed at long-term unemployed people and others at a disadvantage in the labour market and I have no plans to alter existing eligibility requirements. In addition to the categories referred to by the hon. Member, eligibility rules have been relaxed to facilitate access for ex-offenders, who can count time spent in custody as unemployment; ex-regular members of HM forces; and people leaving youth training without a job to go to.

As part of a new package of measures to help unemployed people which I announced on 20 March, the Employment Service will shortly be launching a new programme of short job search seminars. These will be available to people who have been out of work for 13 weeks or more. The seminars will include guidance on where and how to look for work, based on materials used in job clubs.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs there were in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he has any estimates for the number of job clubs for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: I have been advised by officials in the Employment Service that the number of job clubs open at the end of the 1989-90 year was 1,010. The number of job clubs open at the end of 1990-91 was 943.

There is no set target for the number of job clubs in 1991-92. We have asked the Employment Service to make 156,000 places available on the programme, an increase of 15,000 over the number helped in 1990-91. It is expected that the Employment Service will open a small number of additional job clubs in order to reach this number of places.

No figure is available for 1992-93. This will be agreed between myself and the chief executive of the Employment Service at a later stage during negotiations on the annual performance agreement for 1992-93.

Work Permits

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances non-EC nationals would receive a work permit to work in the United Kingdom for less than one month; and how many such permits have been issued in the last year.

Mr. Jackson: Any application for a work permit for a period of less than one month will be approved if the application satisfies the criteria of the work permit scheme. The number of permits issued for less than a month in the 12 months since 17 June 1990 is 3,590.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Bananas

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he has received any representations about the absence of a decision by the European Council of Ministers on trade arrangements for bananas after 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will seek an agreement with his European counterparts at the Luxembourg summit on trade arrangements for bananas after 1992 which guarantees the price and existing access of eastern Caribbean bananas;

(3) what steps he intends to take to honour the commitment made in 1987 to guarantee the supply of eastern Caribbean bananas to the United Kingdom after 1992;

(4) if he will raise the question of the European Commission's delay in reaching decisions on the Banana protocol under the Lomé convention at the forthcoming Luxembourg summit.

The Prime Minister: The European Commission is considering arrangements to apply to bananas in the single European market post-1992. The Government will seek to ensure that new arrangements fulfil our commitments to Commonwealth Caribbean suppliers. We shall also take account of consumers interests, the need for budgetary restraint, trade policy considerations and the competition and efficiency objectives of the single market initiative. I have discussed the issue with the Prime Ministers of Dominica and Jamaica and am very alive to their economic needs.

Officials are in touch with the Commission, who are aware of the need to make proposals as soon as possible. In the absence of these proposals it would be premature to raise the issue at the Luxembourg European Council.

Council of Europe

Mr. Ward: To ask the Prime Minister if he has made any changes to the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the 43rd session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) from the Government Benches to be a representative on the delegation to the 43rd session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe in succession to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris). I have also appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Sir A. Durant) as a substitute delegate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Wormwood Scrubs (Escape)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Attorney-General whether he intends to ask the police to investigate the alleged involvement of the Rev. John Papworth, and Mrs. Anne Randle in the escape of George Blake from Wormwood Scrubs prison; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The police have already completed an investigation, but it failed to reveal sufficient evidence to justify the institution of proceedings against the Rev. John Papworth or Mrs. Anne Randle for any offence.

Legal Aid

Mr. Gerry Steinberg: To ask the Attorney-General in what percentage of cases the Legal Aid Board pays an assisted person's costs or fees.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Aid Board pays an assisted person's legal costs in all legally-aided cases. These are offset by any contribution due from the assisted person under the rules for financial eligibility for legal aid. In a successful civil action, costs may also be offset by any costs recovered from the other side and, where necessary, out of property recovered in the action.

Shootings, Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what recommendation assistant chief constable Sampson made with regard to the prosecution of Royal Ulster Constabulary officers in connection with the shootings of Eugene Torman, Sean Burns and Gervaise McKerr on 11 November 1982;

(2) what recommendation assistant chief constable Sampson made with regard to the prosecution of Royal Ulster Constabulary officers in connection with the shootings of Roddy Carroll and Seamus Grew on 12 December 1982;

(3) what recommendation assistant chief constable Sampson made with regard to the prosecution of Royal Ulster Constabulary officers in relation to the shooting of Michael Tighe in November 1982;

(4) what recommendation assistant chief constable Sampson made with regard to the prosecution of MI5 officers in connection with the shooting of Michael Tighe in November 1982.

The Attorney-General: As is the usual practice with police reports covering criminal investigations, the report by Mr. Colin Sampson has not been published and any recommendations he may have made accordingly remain confidential. I have nothing to add to the statement which I made to the House on 25 January 1988.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Order Act

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the Public Order Act seeking more effective powers to prevent provocative racist marches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have carefully considered the Commissioner's reported remarks. At present we are not persuaded that the Public Order Act requires amendment. We shall continue to keep the legislation and its operation under review.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what licences have been issued for the animal procedures carried out on behalf of Kraft General Foods on the effects of the ingestion of coffee; and what steps have been taken to establish such procedures are in accord with practices licensed in the United Kingdom under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986;

(2) what licences have been issued for animal procedures carried out on behalf of Nestlé on the effects of the ingestion of large volumes of coffee; and what steps have been taken to ensure such procedures are in accord with practices licensed in the United Kingdom under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are not aware of any work of this nature being carried out in this country.

Policing, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase has been made to the number of police officers and civilian auxiliaries for Northumberland over each of the past five years, and what has been the increase or decrease in crimes reported, detected and cleared up over that period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is set out in the tables:

Visa Applications

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of visa applications that have been refused in each of the last three years from (a) Pakistan, (b) India, (c) Bangladesh and (d) Sri Lanka.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Applications for entry clearance for settlement or temporary purposes refused initially[1]

	Number of persons

Bangladesh	3,520	4,270	4,540

Pakistan	10,980	12,320	16,530
Sri Lanka	810	710	1,050

[1] Some applications refused initially are granted subsequently on appeal.

Advertising

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what budget his Department has for advertising in ethnic newspapers or magazines, the services and responsibilities of his Department; and what amount of money has been spent on this publicity in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Home Office does not set a specific ethnic publications advertising budget. Each case is considered on its merits in conjunction with advertising agencies and the Central Office of Information. The total for the current financial year will not, therefore, be known until year-end.

Figures for the past five years, inclusive of VAT, are:

1986-87	11,400
1987-88	64,600
1988-89	40,300
1989-90	30,200
1990-91	34,100

Sexual Offences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men were sentenced in 1989 to terms of custody, in prisons or young offenders institutions for sexual offences; and how many of these were sentenced for homosexual buggery, soliciting, indecency and procuring where there was either explicit consent by the parties concerned or an absence of coercion, threats or intimidation.

Mr. John Patten: Information requested is given in the table. Data as to whether consent was given or there was an absence of coercion, threats or intimidation by the offender is available centrally only where lack of consent is an element of the offence.

England and Wales

Offence	Immediate Custody
	Young Offender Institution	Unsuspended and Partly Suspended Sentence of Imprisonment
All Sexual Offences	223	2,137
Buggery with consent	—	10
Buggery without consent	11	167
Soliciting by a man[1]	1	5
Indecency between males	3	20
Procuring of males	—	3

[1] Data does not distinguish as to whether males or females have been solicited or importuned by male offenders.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether men imprisoned for consenting homosexual behaviour will be required to undergo the Government's proposed programme of treatment and supervision of sex offenders.

Mrs. Rumbold: Subject to the provisions of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 and the general criminal law, a homosexual act in private is not an offence provided that the parties consent thereto and have attained the age of 21 years. In the structured programmes to be introduced in certain prisons, priority will be given to those offenders who are likely to represent the greatest risk to the community on release.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the main routes by which asylum seekers from Zaire, Angola, Sri Lanka, Palestine, Uganda, Ghana, Turkey, Somalia, Zambia and Ethiopia come to the United Kingdom; and what are the intermediate stopover points en route.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relates to passengers who apply for asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom. Among those who arrived in the first quarter of 1991 and whose point of embarkation or transit is known, more than 50 arrivals of the approximate total of 3,000 are recorded as having come from each of the following:

Addis Ababa
Bombay
Brussels
Calais
Colombo
Delhi
Dhaka
Entebbe
Istanbul
Lagos
Larnaca
Moscow
Muscat
Nairobi
Paris
Rome
Sofia

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals made a further application for asylum in the United Kingdom after having the first application refused, in each year since 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Reliable information is not available. Further applications are not included in the figures for new asylum applications.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give (a) the spending on energy efficiency in 1989-90 and 1990-91, (b) the number of dedicated energy managers and the number of person years devoted to energy management in 1989-90 and 1990-91 and (c) the number of energy audits completed in the last five years, all in relation to the 21 buildings for which energy consumption figures were given in the answers of 30 April 1990, Official Report, columns 399-402.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information in relation to the 21 buildings for which energy consumption figures were given in the answers of 30 April 1990, Official Report, columns 399-402 is as follows:

(a) I am not able to provide this information as responsibility for expenditure on energy efficiency for this part of the Home Office rested with property holdings at the Department of the Environment for the periods referred to.

(b) There was one dedicated energy manager in 1989-90 and one in 1990-91. The number of person years for both periods was 1·1.

(c) Seven energy audits were completed in the last five years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 77-78, what information is available on spending by his Department on energy efficiency outside the prison service estate.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Pursuant to the answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 77-78, the energy management team have only recently taken over responsibility from the property holdings for these buildings. Although surveys have been carried out there has to date been no significant investment in energy management. Bids for such expenditure are currently being considered.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he can now provide 1990-91 figures for the energy spending and the energy consumption for each of the 21 buildings for which 1989-90 information was published in the answers of 30 April 1990, Official Report, columns 399-402.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The energy spending and energy consumption for each of the 21 buildings listed in the answers of 30 April 1990, Official Report, columns 399-402 are as follows:

Police

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to obtain from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis a copy of the document on the meeting which took place recently to discuss the police response to political changes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand the document referred to in the question is an internal management document belonging to the Metropolitan police service. It served as an annotated agenda for the Commissioner's conference. This is an annual event where the top 140 managers in the Metropolitan police service review the performance of the service and plan for the future.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to amend the legislation governing telephone tapping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no intention to amend the legislation.

Redwood Publishing Limited

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the acquisition by BBC Enterprise of Redwood Publishing Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am not aware of any representations made to us concerning the BBC's acquisition of Redwood Publishing Limited. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is considering the effects on the market of television broadcasters, including the BBC, promoting their own magazines and other goods.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer, Official Report, 3 June, column 81, what was the nature of the matters which led to the dismissal and suspension of officials; how many officials were dismissed and suspended in (a) the Passport Agency and (b) the immigration and nationality department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the eight dismissals, five involved staff working in the Immigration and Nationality Department and related to abuse of position, refusal to work where posted and three instances of unauthorised absence. The three staff working in the passport agency were dismissed for failure to observe working procedures, following a criminal conviciton and custodial sentence and unauthorised absence.

Of the eight suspensions, five involved staff working in the immigration and nationality department or the immigration service. Two of these related to cases resulting in dismissal (abuse of position and refusal to attend work); two involved failure to observe working procedures and one offensive behaviour.

The three passport agency cases involved two of those resulting in dismissal (failure to observe procedures and the criminal conviction) and the other a financial irregularity.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Fereidoun Sadeghilakhtaki applied for British citizenship (H.O. Ref: 51 10/12/87); when a decision is to be taken on his application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Sadeghilakhtaki applied for British citizenship in December 1987. Inquiries on the case started in October 1989. Our request to Mr. Sadeghilakhtaki for his passport, marriage certificate and other evidence received no response. An inquiry from the Bradford citizens advice bureau in May this year about the case indicated that Mr. Sadeghilakhtaki had moved to a different address. We are now asking again to see the necessary documentation, and a decision on the case should be possible as soon as we have received and examined this evidence.

Immigration Ministers' Meeting

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the meetings of Trevi and European Community Immigration Ministers in Luxembourg on 13 and 14 June.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration was the tenth in the series of meetings held towards the end of each presidency since 1986.

Discussion at the Immigration Ministers' meeting focused on the draft external frontiers convention. Ministers welcomed the progress made in negotiations under the Luxembourg Presidency and concentrated on outstanding issues. The external frontiers convention, the provisions of which are described in more detail later, provides for agreed standards of immigration control over third country nationals at the external frontiers of the European Community, supported by a computerised list of those who are inadmissible. It contains provisions relating to visas, including the mutual recognition by other member states of visas issued for short visits by one member state. In addition it provides for travel without visas between EC member states by third country nationals lawfully resident in an EC country in circumstances in which they would otherwise require visas. The convention further envisages the harmonisation of the visa policies of EC member states in due course. Difficulties arose over provisions in the draft convention for the controls to be exercised at airports within the European Community. Discussion of the draft convention continues.

The meeting of Trevi Ministers endorsed various further measures to strengthen practical police co-operation developed during the Luxembourg Presidency, in particular with regard to posting of liaison officers within and outside the EC; co-operation on police training; continued work on the creation of a European drugs intelligence unit and the establishment of a European police information system to combat serious crime. Detailed work on the establishment of a permanent secretariat for Trevi, which was led by the United Kingdom, was fully considered and a decision on the location will be taken during the Dutch Presidency.

Draft convention of the member states of the European Communities on the crossing of their external borders
Summary of provisions

Article 1: defines the terms used in the convention.

Articles 2-5: outline the general nature of controls to be applied at the external frontiers of the European Community.

Article 6: establishes the system for the application of controls at airports.

Article 7: sets out the conditions of entry to member states in respect of short stays.

Article 8: enables non-EC nationals who are lawfully resident in the European Community, to make a short visit or transit another member state without having to obtain a visa.

Article 9: Confirms that admission for stays in excess of three months is subject to national legislation.

Articles 10-13: provide for the establishment of a computerised common list of inadmissible and non-EC nationals and lay down principles for the treatment of non-EC nationals who do not meet the criteria for entry.

Article 14: requires member states to adopt carriers' liability provisions.

Articles 15 and 16: provide for the removal of illegal entrants and overstayers.

Article 17: confirms the member states' commitment to establish a harmonised visa policy.

Articles 18-25: provide for member states to mutually recognise each others short stay visas and, in the longer term, for the introduction of a uniform visa valid for travel throughout the European Community.

Article 26: establishes an executive committee which will interpret the provisions of the convention and oversee their implementation.

Article 27: confirms that the application of the convention is subject to the provisions of the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees and to the provisions of the treaty establishing the European Economic Community and related instruments.

Article 28: deals with the territorial application of the convention.

Article 29: prohibits reservations.

Articles 30-33: are concerned with the procedural arrangements to come into effect following signature and ratification of the convention.

Independent Television

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans too change the ITV levy rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The mixed levy on advertising revenue and profits is intended in the 1990-92 ITV contract extension period to yield broadly the same revenue, other things being equal, as would have arisen if the pre-1986 profits-based structure still applied.

Meeting this objective depends on accurate forecasting of advertising revenue. In practice this has been lower, and thus the levy yield has so far been higher than was expected. But it is not clear for how long present trends will persist, and the Government are committed to avoiding further under-recoveries of levy. I therefore plan to re-examine the position in the autumn. If any changes to the levy rates are justified they would be introduced by early 1992.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Overseas Development Administration gives aid to countries not helped by (a) the United States of America and (b) the World bank.

Mrs. Chalker: The following countries received development assistance (gross oda) from the United Kingdom, but not from the United States of America in 1989:

Algeria	Laos
Anguilla	Malaysia
Antigua and Barbuda	Mauritius
Bahamas	Montserrat
Barbados	Nicaragua
Bermuda	St. Lucia
Cayman Islands	Surinam
Chile	Tonga
China	Trinidad and Tobago
Congo	Turks annd Caicos
Dominica	Tuvalu
Grenada	Uruguay
Hong Kong	Vanuatu
Kiribati	Virgin Islands

Countries receiving development assistance from the United Kingdom in 1989 which do not receive World bank loans or credits, either because they are not members of the institution or because they have satisfactory access to other sources of finance, are:

Antigua and Barbuda	Israel
Bahamas	Singapore
Bermuda	Tuvalu
Hong Kong

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in rank and order, according to their gross national product per head, the countries to which the Overseas Development Administration gives aid; and if he will give the amount of aid given to each country for the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to table 25 of "British Aid Statistics 1985-1989", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, which lists in order of GNP per head, gross British bilateral aid expenditure for each country in receipt of our aid.

Kurdish People

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Overseas Development Administration personnel and relief workers sponsored by Overseas Development Administration were in Iraq, Iran, or Turkey on (a) 6 June, (b) 13 June and (c) 20 June; and how many are planned to be there on 27 June.

Mrs. Chalker: The numbers of people deployed by the ODA in Iran, Iraq and Turkey on the dates in question were (a) 92, (b) 88 and (c) 85.

We are consulting with the United Nations agencies on future requirements.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner London (Expenditure)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current (a) level of budget expenditure per adult in each inner London borough and (b) level of external support per adult in each such borough.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

Charging Authority Area	Demands and Precepts on Collection Fund per adult[1] £	External Support to Charging Authorities' Collection Fund per adult[2] £	Specific Grants to Charging Authorities' General Fund per adult[3] £

[1]The total demand made by the charging authority on the collection fund plus the precepts on the fund made by the precepting authorities, i.e. the Metropolitan police and the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. It thus represents the expenditure by all tiers of authorities financed by the collection fund. This expenditure does not include expenditure covered by specific grants.

[2]The sum of revenue support grant, contributions from the non-domestic rate pool, special grants and community charge grant.

[3]Specific grants in aggregate external finance, community charge reduction scheme grant and community charge benefit. Specific grants to precepting authorities, i.e. Metropolitan police and London Fire and Civil Defence Authority amount to £141 per head.

Council House Sales

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the total receipts from sales of council-owned properties in each local authority in Great Britain since the introduction of the right to buy and the numbers of houses and flats which have been sold.

Mr. Yeo: A table showing available information on total sales for each English local authority since 1979-80, and those under right to buy, was placed in the Library on 18 April 1991 Official Report, column 227. Corresponding information on the total receipts from sales for each local authority is not readily available.

I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales for information about Scottish and Welsh authorities.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the financial adjustment fixed by each charging local authority in England for 1991-92 to be paid by each charge payer as a result of the failure, anticipated or actual, of all charge payers to pay charges lawfully demanded; and what were the comparable figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of Government grant per community charge payer for 1990-91 in (a) Doncaster and (b) Kensington and Chelsea.

Mr. Key: Government grants in 1990-91, consisting of revenue support grant, special grants, specific grants in aggregate external finance, community charge benefit grant and transitional relief grant, paid per head of relevant population to Doncaster metropolitan council and to the London borough of Kensington and Chelsea are £338 and £960 respectively.

Rating Assessments

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against the 1990 rating assessments in the Bournemouth area are outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: On 17 June, there were 2,649 outstanding appeals against the 1990 rating list assessments in the area covered by Bournemouth borough council and a further 143 proposals to alter the rating list had been received by the valuation office.

Council House Sales

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties sold under the right to buy on the Phythian Street estate, Liverpool, are being compulsorily acquired for the purpose of demolition; whether this is in accord with the wishes of tenants; what are the costs involved; how much of the costs will be met locally and how much nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The remodelling of the Phythian Road estate may necessitate some demolitions to create a traditional layout, to allow for proper circulation within the estate and to provide vehicular access to all properties.

Four properties have been sold under the right-to-buy legislation from the 645 on the estate. None is being compulsorily acquired. It is Liverpool city council's intention to acquire by agreement and the costs of acquisition will be at full market price and will therefore vary according to that valuation. The costs will be part of the overall scheme costs for the project which is funded jointly by the Department's estate action programme and the city council's own capital programme.

Homelessness

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families with dependent children were accepted as homeless in Blyth Valley in 1990.

Mr. Yeo: According to the quarterly returns made to the Department by Blyth Valley borough council for 1990, 279 households were accepted under the homelessness legislation and had a priority need for accommodation because there were dependent children.

Aggregates Working Parties

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to include representatives of the environmental and amenity organisations in membership of the regional aggregates working parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The regional aggregates working parties provide technical advice on the issues which concern the supply and demand for primary aggregates. The local authority representatives ensure that the Secretary of State is fully appraised of the environmental aspects of aggregates provision. However, I do of course welcome the views of amenity or environmental groups about the demand forecasts and the environmental implications. Their comments will be very carefully considered in the preparation of the new draft guidelines on the provision for aggregates to replace mineral plan guidance note 6. This will be the subject of a full public consultation exercise in due course.

Green Show, Birmingham

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department made to the Green Show, held between 23 and 27 May at the national exhibition centre in Birmingham.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and the Countryside visited the Green Show on Thursday 23 May, and participated in a Blue Peter programme live broadcast on the environment. The Department's leaflet "Wake Up—to What You Can Do for the Environment" was distributed to visitors from the Blue Peter stand. A number of organisations which are grant aided by the Department participated in the show.

Toxic Emissions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what attempts are made to monitor and log fugitive toxic emissions to the atmosphere or water sources from industrial operations in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: By its nature source monitoring of fugitive emissions is difficult to undertake. The regulatory authorities therefore place greater reliance on the application by industry of appropriate safeguards in plant design and process operation to minimise fugitive emissions and on early rectification of any abnormal situations.

The National Rivers Authority regularly monitors for a wide range of substances including those consented for discharge to surface waters. Results are entered on public registers held by each NRA region. Some monitoring of air quality is undertaken by local authority environmental health departments.

Housing, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the Government's allocation to Blyth Valley local authority for expenditure on improvement grants of private sector housing in real terms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have not made specific allocations to local authorities for expenditure on improvement grants. However, the amounts of Exchequer contribution given by the Department to Blyth Valley borough council towards its expenditure on home improvement grants for the financial years 1981-82 to 1989-90, at current values, is as follows. Information is not available for years prior to 1981-82.

Year	£
1981-82	590,483
1982-83	661,459
1983-84	810,791
1984-85	851,060
1985-86	822,668
1986-87	820,752
1987-88	797,711
1988-89	762,608
1989-90	739,348

Improvement grants were replaced by a new system of renovation grants on 1 July 1990.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the total levels of new houses completed in each year from 1970 to 1979 and in 1989 in Northumberland.

Mr. Yeo: The available information about the numbers of housebuilding completions by local authority area in 1989 is in table 1(b) of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", No. 97 (April 1991). In the case of Northumberland county totals are not shown because of non-response to the regular housebuilding returns by one authority. The Department's current estimate of new housebuilding completions in Northumberland in 1989 is 1,500 dwellings.

The publication also lists on page iv the volume numbers in which Northumberland totals for the earlier years can be found. Copies are in the Library.

Lower Grange, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department agreed with Wimpey the sale price of properties at Lower Grange in Bradford at the time city grant assistance for the development was agreed; whether his Department issued advice to the developers over what action they should take to safeguard against speculation over the purchase of such property, including prohibition on early re-sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The appraisal of the application for city grant involved the Department's assessment of the likely open market prices of the houses. It is not the Department's practice to issue advice to developers about speculation by purchasers but conditions of grant specify that the houses will be sold at the best prices reasonably obtainable on the open market and that not more than one house is sold by the developer to each purchaser. There is no prohibition on early resale.

Terrapins

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ban the importation of terrapins into the United Kingdom on animal welfare grounds.

Mr. Baldry: I am satisfied that the existing import controls are generally adequate, but with our EC partners, we shall be considering some changes to procedures for monitoring imports of certain terrapin species.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many terrapins have been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the past five years.

Mr. Baldry: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Sports and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made on the issuing of the circular/guidelines on the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering for the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Department of the Environment circular 9/91 on the subject was issued on 29 May.

Haringey Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what use he intends to make of his sanction powers under part 1 of the Local Government Act 1988 in relation to Haringey council.

Mr. Key: On 12 December 1990, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, served a notice under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988 on Haringey council, setting out his view that in 1989-90 the authority had failed to meet the specified financial objective in carrying out building cleaning.

My right hon. Friend has now considered the response which the authority has made to the section 13 notice, and which has acknowledged the failure to meet the specified financial objective in 1989-90. The authority has indicated that it has decided to put the work out to tender again, with a start date for the new contracts on 1 January 1992.

My right hon. Friend has concluded that the scale of the deficit incurred in 1989-90 and the need to ensure that the performance of this work is placed on a firm financial basis as soon as possible make it appropriate for him to make further use of his sanction powers. He has therefore today made a direction under section 14 of the 1988 Act, requiring the authority to complete a re-tendering exercise for the work by 1 January 1992.

International Environment Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution was made by his Department to International Environment Day on 5 June.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The Department works constantly to protect and improve the national and international environment. On the day in question my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was in the United States to discuss environmental issues; my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside addressed the Association of County Councils' environment seminar, announced the Blue Flag awards for 1991, and attended a Tidy Britain Group conference on protection of the coastline; and I visited the London ecology centre.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government considers that Dounreay is a potential site for the underground storage of high level radioactive waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

No work to identify potential sites for disposal of high-level waste has yet commenced. Government policy is that high-level waste should be stored safely for at least 50 years to allow its heat and radioactivity to decay.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burma

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Burma concerning the house arrest of the General Secretary of the National League of Democracy, Aung San Suu Kyi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have frequently urged the Burmese military authorities (the SLORC) to put an end to violations of human rights, in particular the detention of members of the National League for Democracy who won over 85 per cent. of votes cast in democratic elections held in Burma on 27 May 1990. The Secretary of State wrote to the chairman of the SLORC on 6 July 1990, and statements were made on 7 September 1990 and 28 May 1991. The Secretary of State also made a statement at the EC/ASEAN Foreign Ministers meeting in Luxembourg on 30 June. We were also associated with an 18-nation demarche on 21 September last year, and with EC statements on 4 January and 27 May 1991.

European Community Offices

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his private office have served in the European Community or Commission offices in Brussels.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. The Private Secretary, one of the two assistant Private Secretaries, and other members of the Foreign Secretary's private office have served in European Community capitals. The other assistant Private Secretary has worked on European Community matters in London.

Mongolia

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any kind of assistance is being given to the new Mongolian democracy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans to introduce a specific aid programme for Mongolia, but we are making available at least £155,000 in other forms of assistance during the financial year 1991-92. This funding includes a cultural exchange programme, an English language teaching scheme, as well as provision for sponsored visits to the United Kingdom, scholarships for Mongolians to study in the United Kingdom, and specific bilateral aid projects.

Western Sahara

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving to facilitate the proposed referendum in the western Sahara through (a) the United Nations, (b) the Polisario Front and (c) other ways.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have remained impartial in this dispute, preferring to support the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General to find a just solution. We and other members of the Security Council approved the Secretary-General's referendum plan on 29 April. We shall be paying our full assessed share of the costs of the operation and are considering a request to provide military observers.

Immigration

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what are the reasons for the delay in issuing entry clearance in respect of Mr. Musafar Hussain (Shah) of Pakistan who wishes to visit Mr. Khalid Hussain Shah of 158 St. James Road, Blackburn since the determination by the adjudicator on 7 March 1990 to allow issue of the entry clearance and the refusal of the immigration appeal tribunal on 19 June 1990 to give leave to appeal to the immigration authorities;

(2) if he will set out in detail what steps his Department took following the discovery that a copy of the determination of the adjudicator in the matter of the appeal of Mr. Musafar Hussain (Shah) of Pakistan had been sent to the High Commission Islamabad but had not been received by them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As the hon. Member will be aware from the letter I wrote to him on 12 February 1991, I asked the Home Office to arrange for another copy of the adjudicator's determination to be sent to the High Commission in Islamabad. I have just learned that this second copy was never received. I very much regret this further unfortunate delay, in view of which the Home Office has instructed the High Commission to issue a visit visa to Mr. Hussain immediately.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that decisions of the appellate authorities to allow issue of entry clearance are promptly complied with by entry clearance officers in British posts abroad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the majority of cases when an adjudicator allows an appeal, entry clearances are issued as a matter of course. These procedures are periodically reviewed.

Regrettably, given the very large number of cases handled, delays do sometimes occur and when such problems have been identified clear guidance has been issued. Both the Foreign Office and the Home Office are satisfied that the present guidelines are being followed and that significant improvements in the handling of the vast majority of allowed appeal cases have been achieved. We will continue to monitor these procedures closely.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he proposes to give compensation where the issue of entry clearance certificates is unreasonably delayed by his Department or British posts abroad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is not Her Majesty's Government's practice to pay compensation in entry clearance cases.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of visas granted and the number of refusals, arising from interviews undertaken in Islamabad for entry into Britain on 4, 11, 18, 20 and 27 April.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 18, 20 and 27 April, the British High Commission in Islamabad was closed, 18 April being a religious holiday, 20 and 27 April falling on a Saturday.

The number of visas issued and refused on 4 April and 11 April were as follows:

	Number
4 April
Issued	134
Refused	29
11 April
Issued	139
Refused	52

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review the cold weather payments system in order to ensure that it is paid as part of benefit on an ongoing basis during the winter months.

Mr. Hanley: Following the cold spell last February, the Government have reviewed the operation of the cold weather payments scheme and major improvements are proposed for next winter. First, the capital rule affecting eligibility is to be abolished. Secondly, payments will be made automatically to eligible people without the need for a separate claim. Thirdly, payments will be made for a seven-day period whenever the Met Office forecasts temperatures averaging 0°C or below. If there is no such forecast but subsequently 0°C or below is recorded for a seven-day period, payments will still be made.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years, together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Dr. Mawhinney: The readily available information about the full and part-time appointments for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible is given in "Public Bodies" and "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations". Copies are available in the Library.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the expenditure covered by his Department's hospitality fund for the financial year (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92 to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

(a) 1989-90	355,085
(b) 1990-91	426,380
(c) 1991-92 (to date)	81,716

Mink Farms

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many licensed mink factory farms there are in Northern Ireland; and if he will publish the names of the parliamentary constituencies in which they are located.

Mr. Hanley: There is one licensed mink farm in Northern Ireland, in the South Down parliamentary constituency.

Livestock Density

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the Northern Ireland stocking levels for cattle, sheep and pigs; and what stocking density per hectare this represents for cattle and sheep.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 June 1991]: At June 1990 the numbers of cattle, sheep and pigs on Northern Ireland farms were:

	Number
Cattle and calves	1,506,000
Sheep and lambs	2,505,000
Pigs	590,000

Using appropriate factors to calculate grazing livestock units, the overall stocking density of grazing livestock in Northern Ireland is 1·3 cow equivalents per hectare of grass, forage crops and rough grazing.

Animal Carcases

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers of fallen animals which have been disposed of by rendering for each month since that facility was reinstated by Lisburn By-Products.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 18 June 1991]: The table shows the monthly intake of fallen animals by Lisburn By-Products.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Uruguay Round

17. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about progress being made on the reform of the common agricultural policy to meet the requirements of the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission is known to be working on new proposals for CAP reform. Although the determination of Agriculture Ministers to reform the CAP is a welcome spur to a GATT agreement, such reform is wholly separate from the GATT and will be unlikely to be completed until after the GATT round.

Sheep Worrying

18. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the number of agricultural livestock killed or injured by sheep worrying in the last 12 months for which figures or estimates are available; and what have been the financial implications for support to farmers.

Mr. Curry: Figures on livestock worrying are not held centrally, but it is estimated that up to 10,000 animals are killed or injured by dogs in England and Wales each year. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food provides support through a continuing publicity campaign aimed at educating dog owners about the horrors of livestock worrying.

Rabies

19. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made to ensure the retention of British border controls against rabies.

Mr. Maclean: The Community measures adopted so far allow for the retention of post-import quarantine for dogs, cats and other rabies-susceptible animals.

The Government's objective is to ensure that there is no increased risk of rabies being introduced into this country after 1992.

Whaling

20. Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the failure of the International Whaling Commission to bring to an end commercial whaling.

Mr. Gummer: I have received many letters expressing concern about the possible resumption of commercial whaling. I am pleased that at its meeting this year the International Whaling Commission has maintained the moratorium on commercial whaling.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

21. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the British Veterinary Association to discuss the control of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: I have not met representatives of the British Veterinary Association recently to discuss this issue but my officials are in close and regular contact.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will ask the Tyrrell Committee to look at the safety of burying carcases of BSE affected cattle in landfill tips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Tyrrell committee has considered the survival of the scrapie agent in the soil, and has made no recommendation that landfill sites should not be used. The committee will continue to have this issue in mind in the future consideration of the scientific evidence on spongiform encephalopathies.

Common Agricultural Policy Reform

22. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to meet the Agriculture Ministers to discuss the reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: Agriculture Ministers are next due to meet on 26 June, but no substantive discussion of common agricultural policy reform is likely until the Commission puts forward new proposals.

24. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet the National Farmers Union to discuss reforms to the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I meet representatives from the National Farmers Union at frequent intervals to discuss agricultural isues, including reform of the common agricultural policy.

Farmers

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's policy to help farmers to diversify their sources of income.

Mr. Curry: The Government encourage diversification through advice and financial assistance. More than £5 million has been paid in grants. Surveys have shown 42 per cent. of farms in England have diversified.

Common Agricultural Policy (Costs)

25. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts in the European Community on the costs of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: The cost of the common agricultural policy was a major consideration at the recent Agriculture Council which agreed the 1991 price fixing package.

Pesticides

26. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reduce the level of use of pesticides in agriculture.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's policy is that the use of pesticides should be limited to the minimum necessary for the effective control of pests compatible with the protection of human health and the environment.

This Department spends over £20 million per year on research into pests and pesticides, particularly aimed at reduced usage.

The tonnage of pesticides used in England and Wales has dropped by 18 per cent. since 1979.

Animal Transportation

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received this year to date about the transportation abroad of animals, particularly horses and ponies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government continue to receive a large number of representations on this subject.

In the Community negotiations we are pressing for the continuation of controls which prevent the export of horses for slaughter.

State Veterinary Service

28. Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the levels of staffing in the state veterinary service.

Mr. Maclean: The number of staff in the state veterinary service is constantly monitored and is maintained at a level commensurate with its responsibilities.

Arctic Foxes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which parliamentary constituencies in England Arctic fox factory farms are located.

Mr. Maclean: Information on premises where Arctic foxes are kept is not collected.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate, port by port, of the number of fishing vessels (a) over 400 hp and (b) below 400 hp.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is somewhat unwieldy. In view of this I am writing to the hon. Member.

Sugar

Mr. Illsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission regarding the overproduction of sugar within the Community.

Mr. Curry: We have consistently pressed for measures to discourage overproduction of sugar within the Community, and will continue to do so.

Mink Farms

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licensed mink factory farms there are in England; and if he will publish the names of the parliamentary constituencies in which they are located.

Mr. Maclean: As of April 1991 there were 26 licenced mink farms in England. Information on their locations is not published.

Nitrogen

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to review his policies on controlling the use of nitrogen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Rules concerning the quantity and timing of nitrogen fertiliser applications will in due course be introduced in nitrate vulnerable zones, in line with the provisions of the nitrate directive agreed at the Environment Council on 14 June.

Food Safety

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives from Parents for Safe Food to discuss food safety and quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Food safety and quality are discussed three times a year at meetings I hold with the leaders of 15 consumer groups, and at meetings of the Consumer panel chaired by my hon. Friend, the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department as well as at several ad hoc meetings with consumer representatives. Dr. Tim Lang of Parents for Safe Food was present at a meeting with me on 25 April. We have also corresponded with this organisation and last July I offered it a meeting with officials to discuss its pesticides charter which it has not yet taken up.

Lincoln Veterinary Investigation Centre

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the United Kingdom pig production population was within the catchment area of the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Based on the June 1990 agricultural census (which excludes minor holdings) the pig population within the catchment area of the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre represents some 13½ per cent. of the United Kingdom total.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cases of salmonella that have been considered by the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre for each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The number of incidents of salmonella reported to the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre under the Zoonoses Order 1975 and, since 1 March 1989, under the Zoonoses Order 1989 in each year since 1986 were as follows:

Salmonella incidents reported

Year	Number
1986	57
1987	50
1988	88
1989	445
1990	461
1991	192

Note: Figures for 1991 are for the period 1 January to 18 June 1991.

Ewe Premium Supplement

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the value to sheep farmers within less favoured areas of the increase in ewe premium supplement agreed at the recent CAP price fixing settlement.

Mr. Curry: The increase in the settlement to the annual ewe premium of around £1·19 per eligible breeding ewe is estimated to provide an additional £15 million in support payments to sheep farmers in the less favoured areas in 1992.

Nitrate-sensitive Areas

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the final uptake for the pilot nitrate-sensitive areas scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to announce that, by the closing date of 31 May 1991, applications to join the pilot nitrate-sensitive areas scheme had been received for 87 per cent. of the agricultural land in the NSAs. Eighty per cent. of farmers in the NSAs have applied to join. Details for each NSA are given in the table.

This excellent level of uptake for the pilot nitrate-sensitive areas scheme shows that farmers acknowledge the problem of nitrate leaching into our water sources and, by joining the scheme, that they want to do something about it. Once more Britain leads Europe in environmental policies.

We now have the means to reduce nitrate leaching in the areas concerned. We will also increase our understanding of the nitrate problem through our intensive monitoring of the effectiveness of different measures. This will be important prior to the introduction of wider measures in due course as a result of the implementation of the EC nitrate directive agreed on 13-14 June in Luxembourg.

EMPLOYMENT

"Enterprise in Action"

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of producing his Department's booklet "Enterprise in Action".

Mr. Forth: The cost of producing the booklet "Small Firms in Britain 1991—Enterprise in Action" was £17,500. Supplies of the booklet are available from HMSO bookshops at £4 each.

Youth Training, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are waiting for youth training places in Greenwich for catering and construction skills.

Mr. Jackson: South London training and enterprise council (TEC) is responsible for the operation of youth training in the Greenwich area. The TEC advise that there are three people waiting to enter catering training places and 44 waiting to enter training places in a range of construction based occupations.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the amounts available each week for the enterprise allowance scheme for the last eight years up to and including the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The amount available to participants in the enterprise allowance scheme has remained the same for the last eight years at £40 weekly for up to 52 weeks. However in the financial year 1991-92, training and enterprise councils (TECs), and local enterprise companies (LECs) in Scotland, have the flexibility to pay regular amounts of between £20 and £90 weekly for between 26 and 66 weeks. This flexibility will help TECs and LECs to further improve the quality and survival rate of businesses supported by the scheme.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing for adult male manual workers on full-time rates in (i) manufacturing and (ii) non-manufacturing (a) the total number of employees together with their median hourly earnings, and the number earning less than (b) 50 per cent. and (c) two-thirds the median hourly earnings of all full-time adult male workers on full-time rates.

Mr. Jackson: The available information closest to that requested is published in the "New Earnings Survey 1990" part A (table 1) and part C (tables 70 and 74). A copy of these reports is in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the number of full-time adult (i) male and (ii) female employees in the (iii) clothing and (iv) textiles industries together with the estimated number in each case earning less than (a) half and (b) two thirds median hourly earnings of all full-time adult male and female workers, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The available information closest to that requested is published in the "New Earnings Survey 1990" part A (table 1) and part C (tables 70 and 72). A copy of these reports is in the Library.

EC Initiatives

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give details of the United Kingdom co-ordinator for the "Now" initiative;

(2) if he will give details of the United Kingdom co-ordinator for the "Horizon" programme;

(3) if he will give details of the United Kingdom co-ordinator for the Euroform programme.

Mr. Jackson: Officials at this Department are currently holding talks with a range of organisations about the possibility of taking on the co-ordinating role.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the individuals disqualified from unemployment benefit in each county or district in Wales under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 in each of the last five years were disqualified (a) for six weeks or less, (b) for more than six weeks but under 13 weeks, (c) for 13 to 20 weeks and (d) for over 20 weeks.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

International Labour Conference

Mr. Robert Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for publishing the White Paper on the instruments adopted at the 77th session of the international labour conference 1990.

Mr. Howard: I have today published the White Paper entitled "International Labour Conference".

Minimum Wage

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) of 7 June, Official Report, column 356, if he will publish the calculations produced and the methodology used by his officials which resulted in the estimates given concerning employment effects of the introduction of a national minimum wage.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 17 June 1991]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to a note that was placed in the House of Commons Library on 2 February 1990. The note is called "Estimating the Effect of a National Minimum Wage", and it provides a detailed explanation of the method used, and the steps in the calculations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that clearance times for family credit are not affected by the introduction of the measures in the Child Support Bill.

Mr. Jack: Full account of the need to process family credit claims as quickly as possible will be taken when the provisions of the Child Support Bill have been approved by Parliament and the detailed procedures arising from it are then formulated.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each quarter since April 1990 the number of social fund applicants in the Doncaster area who have been refused loans because of local social fund budget restraints.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Local Offices, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much of the work at his Department's offices in the Doncaster area has been transferred to other offices in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has to alter the disposition of social security benefit claims in the Doncaster area.

Miss Widdecombe: The transfer of work and handling of benefit claims within the Doncaster area are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving family credit in the areas covered by his offices for the Doncaster area; and how many people were receiving family credit in the same areas (a) 12 months and (b) 24 months ago.

Mr. Jack: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Students (Income Support)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many students in England and Wales qualify for income support during college and university vacations.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Pension Books

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what date he anticipates the completion of the transfer of responsibility for the issuing of retirement pension books to central pensions from local Benefits Agency offices.

Miss Widdecombe: Retirement pension books have always been issued centrally. The books were generally issued by the benefits directorate in Newcastle but with the implementation of the computerised system, responsibility will transfer to area computer centres. This transfer will be completed by 15 July 1991.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will issue new guidelines to the Benefits Agency to hold stocks of, and distribute, retirement pension books up until the completion of the transfer of responsibility for the payment of retirement pension to central pensions from the local Benefits Agency offices.

Miss Widdecombe: Local offices do not hold stocks of retirement pension order books. These were generally issued by the benefits directorate in Newcastle but, with the implementation of the computerised system, responsibility is being transferred to area computer centres. The computerisation programme is scheduled for completion by 15 July 1991, by which time the centres will issue all such order books.

Benefit Notifications

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will issue guidelines to the Benefits Agency concerning the deadline for the introduction of computer-generated benefit notifications.

Miss Widdecombe: The phased implementation of the Department's operational strategy computer systems will be completed this month on schedule. Benefit notifications will then be issued by automated means for the great majority of claims for benefits administered by the Benefits Agency.

Prisoners (Retirement Pensions)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if prison inmates who are over the official state retirement age are allowed to be paid their pensions while serving a prison sentence.

Miss Widdecombe: Prison inmates are disqualified from receiving state retirement pension while serving a prison sentence.

Care Home Fees

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals were made against a refusal of income support towards care home fees following an adjudication officer's decision that the capital value of the claimant's property cannot be disregarded after 26 weeks; and what were the results of the appeals.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions during the last financial year his Department disregarded the capital value of property owned by care home residents who had been in receipt of income support payments towards their fees for more than 26 weeks.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. I understand from him that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines govern the circumstances in which representatives of his Department communicate with the owners of managers of private care homes with regard to the financial circumstances of residents in receipt of income support towards care home fees.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to specify every such circumstance. Two instances when departmental representatives can communicate directly with mangers or owners of private care homes are when the manager or owner of the home is the income support customer's appointee or if an income support customer has given consent for specific information to be collected from the manager or owner of the home.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 697, what is his most up-to-date estimate of the numbers of households which (a) claimed, (b) were granted, (c) were refused and (d) still have claims pending for special cold weather payments for February; and if he will estimate how many would have been paid if his new automatic arrangements for payment had been in force in February.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to provide estimated figures for February, but complete figures for the winter period will be placed in the Library when they are available. If automatic arrangements had been in force in February, there would have been about 2·6 million payments for each week of cold weather.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give for each available year from 1978 the amount invested in improving the energy efficiency of his Department in (a) cash terms and (b) 1990-91 money terms;

(2) if he will give for each available year from 1978, the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, expressing the figures in (a) cash terms, (b) 1990-91 money terms and (c) units of consumption for electricity in kilowatt hours, gas in therms, liquid fuel in litres and solid fuel in tonnes; and if he will give the square footage of accommodation to which these figures relate;

(3) if he will give the number of energy audits carried out in his Department in the last five years and for each audit a statement of its main conclusions.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 June 1991]: The Department is committed to supporting the Government's initiative aimed at reducing energy consumption on the civil estate by 15 per cent. over the next five years. In addition to the two technically qualified energy managers, energy liaison officers have been appointed in the Department's agencies, and within each of the major operational units at Newcastle and Fylde benefit directorates and in the territories supporting the district offices of the benefits agencies. They have been trained in the mechanisms for assessing building performance and have been given an operational appraisal of the characteristics of heating and lighting systems to enable opportunities for improvement to be identified. Performance measures have also recently been introduced which will assist in setting and monitoring the agreed overall departmental target of 3 per cent. saving in energy consumption in the 1991-92 financial year.

An allocation of £562,000 has been made for energy efficiency initiatives in the financial year 1991-92. This is in addition to sums which will be spent as an integral part of building refurbishment and new construction projects. Particular attention is being given to boiler replacement and improvements to lighting using high-frequency, low-energy fluorescent and ultra-sonic controls.

The figures in the table show the amount invested in improving the energy efficiency in the Department since 1987-88. Information is not available separately for the Departments of Health and Social Security prior to 1989-90. Further investment was made by the Property Services Agency but the amount cannot be identified separately from the agency's overall expenditure on energy efficiency. Figures have not yet been finalised for 1990-91 but it is estimated that the amount in cash terms will be approximately £140,000.

Year	Cash terms	1990-91 money terms
1987-88	54,000	[1]66,501
1988-89	65,000	[1]74,490
1989-90	133,000	[2]143,308

[1] Joint DH and DSS Investment.
[2] DSS alone.

The following table shows the Department's energy consumption in both cash and 1990-91 money terms for each year from 1985-86 together with the square footage of accommodation to which these figures relate. Information is only available for DH/DSS jointly for the period 1985-86 to 1988-89 but for 1989-90 figures relate to the DSS.

Year	£ million Cash terms	£ million 1990-91 Money terms	Therms million	Kwh million	Litres million	Tonnes	Area sq. ft million
1985-86	11·76	15·75	13·34	110	9·50	7,314	15·93
1986-87	9·68	12·55	8·5	110	9·05	8,230	16·25
1987-88	9·80	12·07	8·4	130	9·05	7,077	16·79
1988-89	9·95	11·40	7·8	130	4·60	4,250	17·33
1989-90	9·87	10·63	7·6	145	3·94	4·201	[1]14·75

[1] DSS only.

The 16 energy audits carried out between 1986-87 and 1988-89 in the DH/DSS buildings and in 14 DSS buildings in 1989-90 have concentrated on the least efficient offices. In addition to the initiatives mentioned which address some of the conclusions we are considering others such as the installation of water meters and water flow controls, remedying defects to window frames, maintaining records of the utilities and displaying "Energy Management" posters for publicity.

Consultancy Fees

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total fee paid by his Department (a) to Arthur Andersen Consulting and (b) all other consultants in the last financial year for which figures are available; what was the charging basis on which (a) and (b) were paid; and what was the number of hours worked by consultants for (a) and (b).

Mr. Jack [holding answer 13 June 1991]: In the financial year 1990-91, the total fees paid for management and computer consultancy, including VAT and expenses amounted to £69·75 million. Approximately 90 per cent. of the fees were based on the number of hours or days worked. Most of the remaining 10 per cent. of fees were attibutable to fixed price contracts. The total number of hours worked by consultants could be obtained only at disproportionate cost as such information is not collected centrally. Separate information has not been given for Andersen Consulting as to do so could constitute a breach of commercial confidentiality, and perhaps harm the competitive process for contracts thus making it more difficult to secure value for money.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security of total fees paid in the last financial year for which figures are available what proportion of them were accounted for by work subject to (a) open tender, (b) closed tender and (c) non-tender.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 13 June 1991]: The proportion of fees paid to management and computer consultants in the financial year 1990-91 as the result of a competitive tender, for which a number of firms are invited to bid, was 25 per cent. The remainder of the fees represented work contracted following single tendering. In all cases of single tender, a tender is received and evaluated. In making the decision as to which firm is to be invited to tender, extensive use is made of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency index of computer consultants and the Treasury index of management consultants. The information from these two indexes is supplemented by information gathered directly as a result of the Department's own use of consultants.

Pensioners

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (i) the percentage and (ii) the cash increase in real terms in the incomes of pensioners in (a) the top and bottom quintile groups and (b) the top and bottom decile groups of pensioner households for each year since 1983.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 14 June 1991]: The available information is set out in the table. The figures are based on median equivalised net household incomes at 1987 prices taken from the family expenditure survey. The most recent data available are for 1987. Estimates based on 1984 and 1986 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Statistically reliable figures cannot be provided for decile groups.

Changes in the median equivalised net household incomes of given groups of pensioners

	Percentage change
	Highest quintile group	Lowest quintile group
1979-81	4	7
1981-83	3	4
1983-85	8	1

1981-83	6·00	3·10
1983-85	15·00	0·90
1985-87	12·70	0·90
1979-87	40·70	9·60

Note: Income is equivalised and presented per married couple equivalent.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (a) the top and bottom quintile groups and (b) the top and bottom decile groups of income distribution were pensioners in each year since 1983.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 June 1991]: Such information as is available is in the table. Figures could be obtained for 1984 and 1986 only at disproportionate cost. The figures given are taken from the family expenditure survey and are based on equivalised household income, before housing costs. 1987 is the last year for which information in the form requested is available.

Pensioners shown as proportions of the specified income distribution groups

	1979	1981	1983	1985	1987
Top quintile group per cent.	7	8	8	9	8
Bottom quintile group per cent.	35	26	22	24	25
Top decile group per cent.	7	8	9	8	8
Bottom decile group per cent.	29	15	13	15	17

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the particular consequences for pensioners of the proposals in the Budget of his right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The only Budget proposals specific to pensioners were the indexation of the income tax personal and married couple's allowances for those aged 65 and over, and the indexation of the income limit for age-related allowances. This was worth about £2·70 a week for a married man aged 65 and over, paying basic rate tax. The effect of the Budget as a whole depends on the circumstances of individual pensioners.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice and funding is given by his Department to residents of the Duchy of Lancaster to encourage the achievement of the objectives in "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Duchy of Lancaster is working in a practical way towards achieving the objectives stated in "This Common Inheritance".

In agriculture, where the Duchy owns about 35,000 acres of agricultural land let to tenant farmers, the main problem encountered is that of pollution control. The Duchy actively encourages tenant farmers to consider with the Duchy proposals for remedying the problem: the onus is on the farmer and he receives the grants available. The Duchy provides professional assistance and helps with funding where the solution entails fixed equipment. The expenditure by the Duchy runs into many thousands of pounds.

The Duchy encourages the improvement of the countryside by the planting of trees and the enhancement of hedgerows. Free provision of trees and hedgerow whips is made to tenant farmers. There are some 2,500 acres of woodland in hand. When trees are felled replanting takes place with species which are appropriate for the neighbourhood. When compatible with other uses the Duchy opens woodland areas to the public for recreation purposes.

When land in the ownership of the Duchy becomes available for development the Duchy seeks to take the lead in promoting proposals in discussion with the local authorities.

For the most part monuments in the ownership of the Duchy of Lancaster have been taken into guardianship by other authorities: a few do remain in the Duchy's direct ownership and have been the subject of an extensive programme of consolidation and archaeological investigations. These works will secure the fabric of the ruins for another generation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will undertake consultations about establishing a Select Committee charged with responsibility for monitoring the procedures used by Government in telephone tapping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No. This function is carried out by the Commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985, whose annual report is laid before Parliament.

SCOTLAND

Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 143-44, if he will provide an estimate of expenditure for 1978-79 on the new planning total basis in 1989-90 prices, indicating major changes in responsibility over the period.

Mr. Lang: Figures for 1978-79, at 1988-89 prices, adjusted to the new planning total basis on readily available information were given by my right hon. and learned Friend, now the Secretary of State for Transport, in his answer of 30 October 1990 to the hon. Member. As explained, they must be treated as approximate figures only. The table shows these figures expressed in 1989-90 prices using the current GDP deflators at market prices adjusted to remove the distortion caused by the abolition of domestic rates.

The major changes to the responsibility over the period 1978-79 to date include the transfer of the regional development grant scheme in 1984 from the Department of Trade and Industry, the responsibility for the Training Agency in Scotland and the technical and vocational education initiative in April 1991 from the Department of Employment and also, from April 1991, the Nature Conservancy Council, Scotland from the Department for the Environment.

Housing

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much was paid out in hostel deficit grant to housing associations in the last five financial years; and how many units of accommodation this covered;

(2) if he will introduce to Scotland the special needs management allowance currently available in England and Wales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on Thursday 13 June, c. 652, to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke).

Video Recordings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Mr. Lang: There is no centrally held record of all the video recordings purchased by the Scottish Office. A number of training videos have been purchased including:—

"Next Steps: First Agencies"
"Team building"
"How to give exceptional customer service"
"A common sense guide to office safety"
"The Art of Negotiating"

Rent-to-mortgage Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage target figure his Department has set, in respect of the rent-to-mortgage pilot scheme for council house tenants in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The pilot rent-to-mortgage scheme is demand-led and no such targets have therefore been set.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the full-time and part-time public appointments for which his Department was responsible for each of the past five years, together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 14 March 1991, at columns 584-616.

Doctors

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1973 the number of doctors employed by the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally for 1973-75. Data relating to each year from 1979 to 1989 are contained in editions of "Scottish Health Service Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. Figures for 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1990, the latest year for which information is available centrally, are shown in the table:

Doctors in post in the National Health Service in Scotland: Numbers at 30 September

Woodlands (Access)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Forestry Commission woodlands have been sold to the private sector during the last two full years and the current year to date; and how many of these were subject to (a) voluntary and (b) legally binding access agreements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Forestry Commission sold 184 woodlands in 1989 and 138 in 1990. It has sold 93 so far this year.

As regards access agreements, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 5 June, Official Report, columns 262-63.

National Football Stadium

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has received any formal proposals for the creation of a national stadium, other than at Hampden Park; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on proposed levels of Government support for the refurbishment of Hampden Park.

Mr. Lang: The Government have consistently made it clear that they are ready to consider funding support at the margin for a national football stadium. That remains our position. The National Stadium Committee is, however, looking for £15·5 million from central Government towards a £34·5 million scheme for the refurbishment of Hampden Park costed at January 1991 prices. A large proportion of the remaining funding is also expected to come from the public sector. This proportion of support goes beyond what the Government would be prepared to contribute and the committee has been informed of this. Although other proposals for a national stadium have been made for several sites throughout the central belt of Scotland, the only specific request for Government funding has been that of the National Stadium Committee. It is for the football authorities to decide where such a stadium should be located.

School Meals

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in Scotland received free school meals for each of the years from 1979-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested, taken from annual school meals census returns, is as follows:

Pupils receiving free school meals

	Number
1979	142,989
1980	122,618
1981	114,713
1982	124,547
1983	132,953
1984	129,335
1985	136,669
1986	136,627
1987	143,194
1988	145,219
1989	105,232
1990	99,303

Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the costs in terms of civil service administration of grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 2 May 1991—Official Report column 321.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of secondary school children are receiving their education in grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Eggar: About 1·7 per cent. of pupils educated in secondary schools and middle-deemed secondary schools in England are attending schools approved for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Department of Education and Science staff are engaged for the majority of their time on work connected with grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Eggar: There are 30 staff engaged for the majority of their time on work connected with grant-maintained schools.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the capital allocation for each grant-maintained school for (a) 1990-91 where appropriate and (b) 1991-92 and the purpose for each capital allocation.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1991, c. 644-48]: On 23 January I announced at column*201* allocations for named capital projects at grant-maintained schools. Nine schools which were approved for grant-maintained status towards the end of 1990 submitted capital bids in 1991. These schools will receive allocations for named capital projects with a total value of £778,000 to begin in 1991-92. It is assumed that about £579,000 of this sum will be spent in 1991-92.

The bids were considered on the same basis as those submitted earlier. Priority has been given to schools' most pressing needs, including projects related to the health and safety of pupils, and to projects concerned with the introduction of the national curriculum, especially in science and technology.

The following is a list of the named capital allocations.

Capital allocations for grant-maintained schools in 1991-92 named project allocations

Performance Indicators

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department has taken to involve consumer views in the development of performance indicators.

Mr. Eggar: In developing preformance indicators the Department bears in mind the needs of users and parents of the users of the education system. Schools are required to publish a variety of data relating to their performance. From this autumn, secondary schools will be required to publish examination results in a common and consistent form in their prospectuses and in governing bodies' reports to parents. These requirements were the subject of an earlier consultation which stressed the importance of taking the views of parents into account.

Primary schools have been encouraged to publish their school-level results of the tests on seven-year-olds this summer. Regulations will be made to require schools to publish the aggregated results of formal assessments at ages 11, 14 and 16.

We are consulting about how further education colleges should publish their results. In higher education, the statutory funding councils are working with other interested groups to develop performance indicators within their sectors. My right hon. and learned Friend also publishes reports by Her Majesty's inspectorate on educational provision in individual schools and colleges.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what performance indicators are published for his Department.

Mr. Eggar: A range of performance indicators has been included in the departmental report on the Government's expenditure plans 1991-92 to 1993-94 (Cm 1511), a copy of which is in the Library.

Research Projects

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library a copy of the study carried out at his request jointly by the Committee of Vice-chancellors and Principals and the research councils into the costs of research projects funded by research council grants.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend is at present considering the report of this study and he expects the report to be made available to the House.

School Visits

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the schools that he has visited since his appointment as Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have visited the following schools since my appointment in November 1990:

26 November 1990: Ribston Hall GM grammar school
30 January 1991: Stockingford first and middle schools and Alderman Smith high school, Warwickshire
1 May 1991: Jewish Free school, Camden
9 May 1991: Chaucer technical school and Canterbury High school, Canterbury
17 May 1991: St. Pauls CE VA school and Hills Road 6th form college, Cambridge
St. Ivo secondary school, Huntingdon
1 June 1991: Bourne GM primary school, Lincolnshire
7 June 1991: Rushcliffe school, Nottinghamshire
12 June 1991: Valley End CE school, Chobham
19 June 1991: Chestnut Grove school, Balham

On 21 June 1991 I shall visit Harry Carlton school and Djanogly city technology college, Nottingham.

Examinations

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the most recent figures available on pupils' attainments in public examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The results from the 1989-90 school examinations survey are the most recent data which we have available on pupils' attainments in public examinations.

The survey shows that for 1989-90 there have been significant improvements in the examination results obtained by candidates both at 16 and at 18. There is also a decrease in the proportion of 16-year-olds achieving no GCSE qualifications. The key statistics which are available from the survey are:

the proportion of 16-year-olds with five or more GCSEs at grades A-C has increased from 33 per cent. in 1988-89 to 35 per cent in 1989-90;
the percentage of 16-year-olds with no graded result in GCSE has continued to fall: from 7·5 per cent. in 1988-89 to 7·3 per cent. in 1989-90; the proportion of school leavers gaining two or more A levels has increased from 17 per cent. in 1988-89 to 20 per cent. in 1989-90. this is an increase of seven percentage points on the 1978-79 figure of 13 per cent.

Furthermore, the overall participation rate for 16-year-olds has increased to 60 per cent. from 55 per cent. in 1989-90 and 47 per cent. in 1986-87. There is evidence that the introduction of the GCSE has had, and continues to have, a beneficial impact in raising expectations and standards of attainment.

Under-fives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his projection of the number of places available for under-fives at (a) nurseries and (b) play centres in inner London during each of the next five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The Department does not set norms about levels of day nurseries or play centres for young children and we cannot make realistic projections based on the statistics we do collect.

The Children Act 1989, which comes into force on 14 October 1991, introduces a new review duty for local social services authorities and local education authorities jointly to review every three years the day care services in their area available for children aged under eight, to consult and publish a report.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Punctuality)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the punctuality performance targets which have been set for (a) InterCity and (b) other British Rail services.

Mr. Freeman: The following table shows the punctuality targets for British Rail's InterCity, Network SouthEast and regional passenger sectors:

	Targets
(a) InterCity	90 per cent. of all trains to arrive plus or minus 10 minutes
(b) Network SouthEast	88 per cent. of peak trains to arrive plus or minus 5 minutes 92 per cent. of all trains to arrive plus or minus 5 minutes
Regional	90 per cent. of express and longer distance rural trains to arrive plus or minus 10 minutes 90 per cent. or urban and shorter distance rural trains to arrive plus or minus 5 minutes

Group Transport 2000 Plus Report

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for the United Kingdom of the recommendations of the Group Transport 2000 Plus report on transport options for the future, released by the European Commission in January.

Mr. Freeman: The report of the Group Transport 2000 Plus is one of a number of sources being used by the EC Commission to prepare a paper on future Community transport policy. We will assess the implications of that paper as a whole when it has been completed.

Rail Tickets

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to end the exclusivity clause as a condition for the issuing of British Rail tickets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The conditions of carriage are British Rail's responsibility. I understand that British Rail is considering a number of changes, in line with the Prime Minister's citizen's charter initiative which aims to make public services more responsive to the consumer.

Aircraft Emissions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what progress has been made in the study of aircraft emissions foreshadowed in the 1990 White Paper on the environment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment has been made by his Department of the effects of atmospheric pollution and global warming of the airborne discharges of carbon dioxide and nitrous oxide from aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: Emissions of CO_2 from civil aircraft amount to about 3 per cent. of total man made CO_2 emissions and contribute in that proportion to the overall effects of these emissions. Aircraft NOx emissions have only a marginal effect on pollution in areas in the vicinity of airports. The effects of these emissions in the upper atmosphere are more complex to assess, and the results of studies to date are not conclusive. My Department will be participating in a proposed European-wide research study under the aegis of ECAC into the effects of aircraft emissions in the upper atmosphere. Results from the study of water vapour in the upper atmosphere referred to in the White Paper on the Environment are expected in the near future.

Train Doors (Safety)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the past five years, and for the current year to date, the locations of passengers who have fallen from passenger trains; and what type of train set was involved.

Mr. Freeman: The list gives the locations of fatal accidents, those resulting in serious injuries, and those resulting in minor injuries where this information is available. Details of the types of train are also shown, where available; with numbers representing the class of the stock or locomotive involved. Not all the information is readily available for earlier years. The details given for 1990 and 1991 are provisional.

London Underground

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of London Underground trains run on time.

Mr. Freeman: Because of the very high frequency of many underground trains, comprehensive data on performance against timetables is not compiled. The Government monitor the average times that passengers wait for trains. In the first quarter of 1991, the average scheduled wait for a train was 2·5 minutes, the actual wait was 3·4 minutes.

Rail Link (Heathrow)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that sufficient investment is provided for a fast rail link to be constructed between Heathrow and central London; when he expects it to be open for business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 80 per cent. of the funding for the Heathrow express will be provided by the British Airports Authority (BAA), the remaining 20 per cent. by British Rail (BR). The timing of BR's contribution is a matter for the board. The expected date of opening of the Heathrow express is now November 1995. This delay is principally attributable to additions agreed with petitioners when the Heathrow Express Railway Act was considered in Committee.

Manchester Airport Rail Link

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he expects the freeze on investment by British Rail to affect the date of completion of the Manchester airport rail link; what representations he has received on this matter; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No; I have received five letters on this matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Domestic Accidents

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many fatal accidents occurred in the home in 1987, 1988 and 1989; and how many of these took place in (a) the kitchen and (b) householders' gardens.

Mr. Leigh: The total of fatal accidents in the home for the years 1987-89 are:

Accidental deaths in the home and residential institutions

Year	Number
1987	4,208
1988	4,272
1989	4,080

The numbers of accidental deaths in the kitchen and the garden for these years are not available.

Sound Diffusion (Directors)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to disqualify any of the directors of Sound Diffusion from acting as directors.

Mr. Redwood: I am considering the possibility of application to the court under section 8 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Newspapers

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will amend section 58(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 so that sales of newspapers with an average circulation of 500,000 copies or more outside the United Kingdom will be included in the calculation of a newspaper proprietor's circulation with regard to the need for obtaining this prior consent to make any further newspaper acquisitions.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to amend section 58 of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The Government's merger control policy is primarily concerned with the effects on competition in UK markets. The newspaper merger provisions are in addition concerned with the accurate presentation of news and free expression of opinion. Acquisitions by persons owning no newspaper interests in the UK should not raise the same concerns as acquisitions by those who already have a substantial share of the UK newspaper market.

Redwood Publishing Limited

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to refer the acquisition of Redwood Publishing Ltd. by BBC Enterprise to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that this acquisition took place in 1988. Under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 it is not open to me to make a merger reference if more than six months have elapsed since the acquisition took place unless previously concealed facts have emerged. I understand that the merger did not meet the criteria for reference under the Fair Trading Act. However, if the hon. Member has any new information about the acquisition he should bring it to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading, who advises me on merger cases, so that his office can establish whether there is a merger situation qualifying for investigation under the Act.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases the Insolvency Service has decided not to prosecute; and for what reasons.

Mr. Redwood: Official receivers in the Insolvency Service submit reports to the Department of Trade and Industry where investigations have shown that criminal offences appear to have been committed. After vetting by the service they are forwarded to the investigation division of the Department with a view to prosecution. Criminal proceedings are normally instituted by the Secretary of State although a small number of cases are referred to the Serious Fraud Office or the Crown prosecution service. In considering whether criminal proceedings should be instituted, the principles and criteria laid down in the code for Crown prosecutors are applied, and the prosecutor considers whether he is satisfied that there is admissible, substantial and reliable evidence that a criminal offence known to the law has been committed by an identifiable person and, if he is so satisfied, whether the public interest requires a prosecution. In cases where these criteria are not met, criminal proceedings will not be instituted.

During 1990 official receivers submitted 569 reports —627 in 1989—alleging that criminal offences had been committed. During the year convictions were obtained in 290 cases—352 in 1989—resulting in 309 persons being convicted—388 in 1989—of 769 different offences—671 in 1989. Additionally 94 warning letters were issued—107 in 1989—to individuals where there was evidence of an offence having been committed but where it was not considered that proceeding with a prosecution would be in the public interest. During 1990 official receivers also assisted the police or other investigatory authorities in 412 criminal investigations. There were 166 persons convicted during the year in such cases.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many officials in the Insolvency Service are qualified in (a) law and (b) accountancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The latest figures available show that 632 officials in the Insolvency Service have studied for accountancy or allied qualifications. Of these, 84 are fully qualified, 14 will be shortly sitting their final examinations and others are still studying. Additionally, a number of officers are also members of the Insolvency Practitioners Association. Some entrants to the Insolvence Service have law degrees, but there are no fully qualified lawyers. Such legal expertise as is required is provided by the solicitors division of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average time period taken by the Insolvency Service before it initiates legal action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Insolvency Service initiates legal action based on reports submitted by official receivers where the reports allege that criminal offences have been committed or where a director's conduct is such that he is unfit to be a director of a company and an application should be made for him to be disqualified. In both cases official receivers are targeted to submit reports within 10 months of the winding-up orders in at least 80 per cent. of cases identified for investigation.

Where reports alleging criminal offences are submitted by the Insolvency Service to the investigations division of the Department of Trade and Industry with a view to prosecution, further investigation to establish whether there is admissible, substantial and reliable evidence that a criminal offence known to the law has been committed by an identifiable person is frequently necessary. In all cases where it is decided that the criteria for prosecution laid down in the code for Crown prosecutors are met, the objective is to institute criminal proceedings within four weeks of that decision being taken where the case is to be taken summarily. Where the case is to be taken on indictment, the period is eight weeks.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the average age of staff employed in the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Redwood: This information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has identified any further candidates for agency status under the next steps initiative.

Mr. Lilley: As I told the House on 22 May, Official Report, column 475, I continue to consider the possibility of establishing further agencies in the DTI. I have now identified the DTI accounts branch, Newport, as a candidate for agency status, with a view to its becoming operational later this year.

HEALTH

Health Authority Spending

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in revenue spending in both cash and real terms between 1985 and the latest year for which figures are available for each of the regional and district health authorities in England.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures of total revenue expenditure derived from the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England for 1985-86 and 1989-90 (the latest available) are shown in the table.

Although their expenditure cannot be attributed to particular regions, figures for the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals have been included for completeness.

Notes:

1. The expenditure and percentage figures for individual authorities can be expected to vary and are influenced by patterns of local service provision, the fact that people do cross authority boundaries for treatment and other factors. Those for regional health authorities (RHAs) in particular, reflect the extent to which they directly manage services.

2. The balance of service management and accounting responsibility between RHA and districts and between districts varies from region to region and has been subject to changes during the period. For example, in 1989-90 the South West Thames RHA accounted for the total costs of the London ambulance service which in 1985-86 were shared between the four Thames RHAs, and the Mersey RHA devolved responsibility for the Mersey metropolitan ambulance service to the South Sefton (Merseyside) district. Similarly, responsibility for particular hospitals passed from the South West Hertfordshire to the North West Hertfordshire and from the Blackburn to the Burnley district health authorities (DHAs) during the period.

3. Parkside DHA was recently created through the merger of former DHAs from which annual accounts comparative figures for 1985-86 are derived.

4. The figures for 1985-86 have been expressed at 1989-90 prices by the use of gross domestic product deflators.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in revenue spending in both cash and real terms between 1985 and the latest year for which figures are available of each of the family health services authorities in England.

Mr. Dorrell: Family health services authorities (FHSAs) were established under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. Figures of total revenue expenditure derived from the annual accounts of their predecessor family practitioner committees (FPCs) for 1985-86 and 1989-90 the latest available, are shown in the table.

The figures of total revenue expenditure are primarily demand-led payments for family health services (FHS) payments to general medical practitioners, pharmacists, general dental practitioners and opticians. Expenditure is shown after deduction of charges to patients. Cash limited revenue expenditure by FPCs for their own administrative expenses is also included in the totals: £45·1 million (cash) in 1985-86 and £66·5 million (cash) in 1989-90.
2. The figures for 1985-86 have been expressed at 1989-90 prices by the use of gross domestic product deflators.

Operating Theatres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority for (a) 31 March and (b) the latest date he has available, how many operating theatres are closed, listing the reason in each case.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Statistics

Sir William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give both the number of in-patient and out-patients treated by national health service hospitals in 1969, 1979 and 1989, and the number of those employed by these hospitals in each of these years; and if he will also give the percentage change in each case.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is given in the tables.

[2] These data have not been adjusted to take into account reductions in the standard working week, e.g. the reduction in nurses working hours from 41 to 37·5 per week which took place in 1980-81. There is therefore a discontinuity in the time series and the figures should be interpreted with caution.
[3] Comparability affected by the NHS re-organisation that took place in 1974. Figures include data relating to ambulance personnel employed by the Local authorities.

Sickness Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of days lost through sickness by employees of the NHS in the last year for which figures are available; and what is the number of statutory sick days allowed in each section.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Precise details about the number of days lost through sickness and payments made are not held centrally. Control of sickness absence is a matter for local management. It is estimated that in 1989-90 about 4 per cent. of the time of all NHS employees was lost due to sickness.

NHS employees are eligible for statutory sick pay subject to satisfying certain requirements.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the reference made by the Minister of State to a new drug for those with Alzheimer's disease, in the debate on 17 April, Official Report, columns 515-16, what is the current position with regard to the testing and possible licensing of this drug.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 precludes the disclosure of information relating to clinical trials or the processing of product licence applications.

Pesticides

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has regarding the extent of and dangers posed by the poisoning of people by organophosphate pesticides.

Mr. Dorrell: Before pesticides can be used legally in the United Kingdom, they must be approved by Ministers who are advised by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Approved organophosphate (OP) pesticides must be used in accordance with the directions and conditions specified on the product label in order to safeguard workers, consumers of the treated produce and others.

The Department has copies of the reports of the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural and factory inspectorates on poisoning incidents attributed to pesticides. The last one was for a 15-month period from January 1989 to March 1990 and shows that out of a total of 95 suspected poisoning incidents investigated, 25 have been identified as involving OP pesticides. None related to consumption of food from treated crops. One fatality was reported in circumstances where no evidence was available as to how ingestion occurred and the coroner returned an open verdict. Copies of the report are in the Library. The next one is due to be published on 16 July 1991.

Child Minders

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Department has of the number of child minders who are exempt from registration because they work in the family home.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates as being the total additional cost that will fall on local authorities in order to implement the Children Act 1989 in full (a) in the present financial year and (b) in a full financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Central Government do not specify in detail how local authorities should allocate the overall resources available to them but rather indicate their view of appropriate spending through standard spending control totals. The total covering personal social services for children (including specific grants) was £1,540·9 million for 1991-92, an increase of £139·9 million (18·4 per cent.) over the equivalent figure for 1990-91. This increase allows for the part-year implementation of the Children Act from October 1991. The equivalent figure for 1992-93 will not be available until details of the settlement are known.

Terrapins

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of reported cases of salmonellosis arising from the handling of terrapins.

Mr. Dorrell: No cases of human salmonellosis in England and Wales have been associated with the handling of terrapins.

East Birmingham Hospital Trust

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with Mr. John Bettinson about the chairmanship of the proposed East Birmingham hospital trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. No formal appointments can be made in advance of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision to approve a unit for NHS trust status.

Aids

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with publishers and editors of soft porn and gay magazines about their assisting in the educational campaign to warn young people and others of the AIDS risk in promiscuous sex and drug taking.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Education Authority (HEA) has since February 1989 run a series of educational advertising campaigns in the gay press to alert homosexual and bisexual men to the risks of HIV infection and how they can be avoided. A further series of advertisements for placement in the gay press and a wider range of publications read by men is in production. The HEA discusses strategy for this series of campaigns with an advisory group drawn from organisations representing gay men and with representatives of the Gay Business Association.

We welcome the contribution that all sections of the press and media make, to strengthen the effectiveness of the AIDS public education effort.

Sefton General Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been spent on refurbishment of Sefton general hospital in Liverpool since 1979; how many patients have been treated at Sefton general hospital since 1979; what timetable has been established for the relocation of services provided at Sefton general hospital; and where the individual clinical specialties will be relocated from Sefton general hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 7 June 1991]: The information about the number of patients treated is given in the table. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Emberton, the district chairman, for the additional information which is not held centrally.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had been waiting for more than a year for an operation in east Birmingham district on (a) 31 December 1989 and (b) 31 March 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 11 June 1991]: There were 458 people waiting over a year for in-patient operations in east Birmingham district at 31 December 1989 and 456 at 30 September 1990, the latest date for which fully validated waiting list information is held centrally.

Since March 1979 the number waiting over a year for an operation in east Birmingham has fallen by 78 per cent. whilst numbers treated have increased in the order of 32 per cent.

This information is on a "provider" basis and does not relate to the districts' resident population.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will identify and list the 20 waiting lists for operations in the west midlands region with more than 25 per cent. of cases waiting for a year or more.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 11 June 1991]: The information as at 30 September 1990 is given in the table. In west midlands region as whole 23 per cent. of the total number waiting were waiting over one year. In the 12 months to September 1990 the number waiting over a year for in-patient treatment has fallen by 12 per cent. and by 37 per cent. since March 1979. At the same time more patients are being treated. Two and a half per cent. more in-patients were treated in the region in 1989-90 than in 1988-89 and in the order of 29 per cent. more than in 1979.

Health Service (Capital Spending)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total level of hospital and community health services net capital expenditure, excluding receipts from land and property sales in (a) cash, (b) constant prices adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) constant prices adjusted by the changes in the input unit costs since 1973-74.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The information requested is given in the table. In order to give a complete picture of capital investment in the NHS, spending financed through property and land sales is also shown as this is a valuable extra resource which health authorities are able to retain and spend in addition to their cash limits.

Note

Because of transfers between programmes it is not possible to produce a consistent run of figures over the whole period. Figures in presentation A have been adjusted to reflect the transfer to HCHS of FHS administration, disablement services authority and FHS cash limited spending and for the redefinition of capital. The figures in presentation A do not reflect these transfers and are therefore not comparable with those for later years.

ENERGY

Energy Projections

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to revise the projections set out in Energy Paper 55.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes, as part of the review of renewable energy strategy.

Nuclear Power Stations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions in 1991 the nuclear installations inspectorate has reported on interruptions of fuel supply to valves controlling cooling gases at Hinkley B nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that no such incident has been reported. However, there was an incident at Hinkley Point B, on 1 May, which involved the incorrect closure of a valve controlling fuel supplies to the gas turbines. These turbines provide standby electrical supplies to the site. There was no immediate danger and the error was found and rectified during a routine test. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is considering what enforcement action should be taken.

Power Line, Canford Heath

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the consent he gave for the construction of an electricity power line across the site of special scientific interest at Canford Heath, Dorset;

(2) whether an environmental impact assessment was submitted with the application to construct an electricity power line at Canford Heath, Dorset;

(3) what assessment he made of the effect of the proposed electricity power lines across Canford Heath, Dorset on the site of special scientific interest, prior to granting consent;

(4) what consultations he had with the European Commission concerning the application of the European Community directive on the Conservation of Wild Birds (79/409/EEC) to the proposed electricity power line across Canford Heath, Dorset, prior to giving consent.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, has today placed in the Library of the House copies of the decision letter and the two consents which were issued on 17 June. As is explained in the decision letter he considered carefully whether to require an environmental statement but decided that he already had sufficient environmental information to enable him to reach a decision. As the decision letter also makes clear he considered very carefully the environmental effects of the proposals, particularly in the light of the requirements of the EC directive on the conservation of wild birds, in reaching his decision. No consultations were held with the European Commission since implementation of the directive is the responsibility of member states.

WALES

Public Conveniences

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what representations have been made to his Department during the last 12 months regarding the provision of public conveniences.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None, except for those made by my hon. Friend in February and March this year.

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy guidance is given by his Department to local authorities regarding the provision of public conveniences.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Since the provision of public conveniences is a matter for local authorities, no policy guidance has been issued by the Welsh Office.

Immunology

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide funding for the appointment of a consultant immunologist in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The funding and appointment of a consultant immunologist in Wales is a matter for the appropriate district health authority. The Department has not received an application for approval or funding of a consultant post in this specialty.

NHS Staff

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the percentage change in the number of administrative and clerical staff in the national health service in Wales between September 1979 and the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is not possible to give wholly accurate information on this matter. There is uncertainty about the information base. With this proviso it is calculated that between September 1979 and May 1991 there was a 36·5 per cent. increase in whole time equivalent administration and clerical staff employed by the NHS in Wales. This figure includes a large clinically related element.

Factors leading to growth include:

Introduction of general management and recategorisation of some staff;

Strengthening of certain functions (eg finance, IT) associated with White Paper implementation;

New initiatives, eg health education, drug abuse, administration support for professional staff;

Organisational developments eg Planning Forum, VFM, HIU.

Housing Consultancy Contact

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his parliamentary reply of 6 June, Official Report, column 311, if he will give the total amount paid in consultancy fees to Aldbourne Associates Ltd. or its predecessor for each financial year since 1983.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As promised in my answer of 6 June, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as this information is available and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Students (Finance)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent estimate he has made of the number of students in Wales who give up courses in further and higher education colleges due to financial difficulties.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Colleges of further and higher education in Wales have been asked to provide information on the number of students who did not start or continue a course for financial reasons. This information is being collected as part of the monitoring of access funds and relates to students who have been refused support. Information relating to the current academic year will be available this autumn.

Radon

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many measurements he has made of radon concentrations in dwelling houses in Wales; what plans he has to make further radon measurements and if he will make a statement on radon levels in dwelling houses in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Over 1,000 dwellings are included in a survey of radon levels in Wales which the National Radiological Protection Board is carrying out on behalf of the Department. Preliminary indications are that most Welsh homes are not adversely affected by radon although a very small perecentage of houses may have levels of radon above the action level.

The full results of the survey are expected shortly and I will consider the need for further investigation at that time.

Children (Accidents)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many accidents there were to children in each of the counties of Wales in each of the years 1985 to 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not available in the exact form requested.

The information given in table 1 relates to the number of children aged 0 to 16 years admitted to hospitals in each of the counties as a result of an accident, including road traffic accidents, accidents at work, at home or elsewhere. Figures for 1990 and 1991 are not yet available.

Table 2 gives the numbers of children aged 0 to 16 years who were casualties of road traffic accidents in Wales and includes all severities of injury. Complete data for 1991 are not available. Those casualties of road accidents who were admitted to hospital in Wales, other than at accident and emergency departments, are included in both tables 1 and 2.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many severely mentally handicapped patients there are in each of the counties of Wales; how many such patients were resettled from hospital into the community accompanied by hospital nurses; what funds he has made available to enable such patients to be resettled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The following table shows the number of people with a mental handicap who are registered with a county joint planning team, registration and service provision not being dependent on the definition of the severity of mental handicap. Also shown are the actual numbers of people resettled by the end of March 1991 and those planned for resettlement during 1991-92. The expenditure shown excludes the funding to be made available by district health authorities.

Information about the number of people with a mental handicap who have been resettled from hospital into the community accompanied by a hospital nurse is not held centrally.

I congratulate everyone involved in the all-Wales mental handicap strategy on the excellent work being done under this pioneering initiative to resettle people with a mental handicap in the community.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what he estimates as being the total additional cost that will fall on local authorities in Wales in order to implement the Children Act 1989 in full (a) in the present financial year and (b) in a full financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend does not lay down in detail how local authorities should allocate the overall resources available to them but rather indicates his view of appropriate spending through the indicative service distribution of total standard spending. The total covering personal social services (including specific grants) is £224 million for 1991-92, an increase of £37·2 million (19·9 per cent.) over the equivalent figure for 1990-91. This increase allows for the part-year implementation of the Children Act from October 1991. The equivalent figures for 1992-93 will not be available until details of the settlement are announced in the autumn.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the answer of 3 June, Official Report, columns 21-22, whether the figures given for 1990-91 are consistent with the figures given for 1988-89 in the answers of 30 April 1990, Official Report, columns 426-27, and 10 May 1990, Official Report, column 191; and when figures for 1989-90 will be available.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures for energy consumption are not comparable. Those given in the answer of 30 April 1990 related to total consumption for buildings where my Department was in occupation but not in all cases the sole occupant. Those given in the answer of 3 June related to the precise areas of accommodation occupied by my Department and are a more accurate reflection of its consumption. The energy cost figures given in the answer of 3 June 1991 and 10 May 1991 are consistent, as both relate to areas occupied. Figures are available for 1989-90 but they are unreliable.

Women Civil Servants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to encourage promotion of women civil servants within his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is committed to a policy of equality of opportunity. It has introduced a range of measures to enable women to develop their careers. These include flexible working hours, part-time working, job-sharing, re-instatement, career breaks, holiday play schemes and, shortly, a nursery. Guidance to staff emphasises that there must be no discrimination against women in decisions about recruitment, promotion, staff reporting, allocation to duties or selection for training. An annual report monitors these areas in detail. My Department also runs single-sex training courses for women to improve their opportunities for progression into senior grades.

Treatment Centres

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the payment of transport costs of patients attending for surgery, consequential treatment and examination at the three treatment centres set up in 1989-90 and in the proposed new ophthalmology treatment centre.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Travel arrangements to all the treatment centres is the responsibility of the referring health authority. When an authority is not prepared to accept this cost it is for the patients to decide whether to meet the cost themselves. Patients in receipt of income support, family credit or with a low income entitlement may reclaim their costs under the hospital travel costs scheme.

Housing

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to issue planning policy guidance on affordable housing for local needs.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We are today publishing guidance in a circular describing the role the planning system can play in securing the provision of affordable housing, and advising how additional land may be released to meet local needs in rural areas. The circular follows similar advice issued to local authorities in England last month and announced in the House by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning at the Department of the Environment. Copies of the circular have been placed in the Library of the House.

THE ARTS

Community-based Projects

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the impact of Government policy on opportunities for (a) adults and (b) young people to be involved in community-based arts projects.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 18 June 1991]: The Government's support for community arts is channelled through the Arts Council of Great Britain and the regional arts associations. Both provide financial support for the Arts Development Association which represents those involved in the provision of community-based arts projects. The regional arts associations also support a wide range of individual projects, usually in partnership with local authorities. These provide many opportunities for involvement by all sections of the community.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1991-92 and for a full year the effect on Treasury revenues of introducing an indexed 1987-88 regime of higher rates and bands of income tax.

Mr. Maude: If, for 1991-92, the higher rate of 40 per cent. was replaced by the basic rate limit and higher rate bands indexed from their 1987-88 levels, the yield would be about £2 billion in 1991-92 and about £4 billion in a full year. All other aspects of the 1991-92 income tax regime are assumed unchanged. The rates of tax would be:

Taxable income (£)	Per cent.
1 – 23,400	25
23,401 – 26,700	40
26,701 – 33,300	45
33,301 – 43,700	50
43,701 – 54,100	55
Over 54,100	60

Taxable income is income subject to tax from all sources after deducting allowances and reliefs. No account is taken of possible behavioural changes or of any effect on receipts of capital gains tax.

Business Taxes

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the level of business taxes as expressed as a percentage of gross natural product in (a) the United States of America, (b) Germany, (c) Japan and (d) the United Kingdom for 1978-79 and for the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The latest available information in respect of direct taxes paid by corporations can be obtained from page 92 in the November 1990 issue of "Economic Trends" (No. 445) which is available in the Library of the House. It is not possible to distinguish separately indirect taxes paid by corporations.

European Community Budget

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the United Kingdom contribution to the EC budget for the current year.

Mr. Maude: The latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community budget in 1991 is £1,225 million. This was published in the "Statement on the 1991 Community Budget" (Cm. 1490).

Security Vetting

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many posts in the Inland Revenue in Northern Ireland are subject to counter-terrorist checks under the new procedures for security vetting announced by the Prime Minister on 24 July 1990.

Mr. Maude: All new recruits to posts in the Inland Revenue in Northern Ireland are subject to counter-terrorist checks. In the period 1 October 1990 to 18 June 1991 a total of 150 posts have been filled.

Public Information

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will state the reasons for file T160/763/F14755 having been retained to date by the Treasury.

(2) if he will arrange for the file T160/763/F14755, currently held by the Treasury, to be placed in the Public Records Office;

(3) if it is open to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North to inspect file T160/763/F14755.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: According to our research this file appears to have been destroyed in 1977. As a result of a clerical error the PRO was not informed.

Value Added Tax

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider the decision to exclude children's cycle helmets from the exemption from value added tax applied to children's clothing.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Cyclists' safety helmets falling within the provisions of group 17 of schedule 5 to the VAT Act 1983, as articles designed for young children and not suitable for older persons, are and always have been zero-rated for value added tax.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings his Department expects to make as a result of the operation of the Child Support Agency after maintenance tax relief in each year from 1993 to 2000.

Mr. Maude: The introduction of the Child Support Agency is expected to have a negligible effect on the cost of tax relief for maintenance payments.

DEFENCE

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for the latest date he has available in respect of Royal Air Force Finningley how many service married quarters there are in stock and (a) the number vacant, (b) the number vacant for less than six months, (c) the number vacant for up to a year, (d) the number vacant for up to two years and (e) the number vacant over two years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 March 1991 there were 522 service married quarters at RAF Finningley of which 155 were vacant. Of these, 33 had been vacant for up to one year, 78 between one and two years, and 44 for over two years. The majority of these properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintentance and modernisation work while the remainder have been identified for disposal. Figures for quarters vacant for less than six months are not separately collated.

Service Men Overseas

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for 1981 and the latest date he has available the countries in which (a) service men and (b) service women were serving for each of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is in the tables below. The breakdown between service men and service women is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

VIPER Microprocessor

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 611, if he will now make a further statement on his assessment of the consequences of his Department's announcements as to the reliability of the VIPER microprocessor and role in its market launch;

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's handling of its dealings with Charter Technologies Ltd. in respect of (a) the VIPER microprocessor and (b) other contracts.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add at this stage to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 23 May at column 611.

Buccaneer Jet (Near Miss)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made into investigating the near-miss of a Buccaneer jet and Caledonian-MacBrayne ferry "Lord of the Isles" on 30 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The investigation into this incident is progressing and should be completed shortly.

Negligence

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the provisions governing the practice of his Department in making available documents to service men bringing suit against the Government for negligence under the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department's practice is to meet all reasonable requests from the legal representatives of service men for the provision of relevant documents or information to assist them in formulating a common law damages claim, subject to any overriding constraints on the disclosure of a document.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the requirement to prove negligence by Her Majesty's Government before compensation would be received applies to (a) a civil servant in his Department and (b) a membr of the Territorial Army, injured in circumstances similar to those involving Grenadier Guardsmen at Batus range Canada on 7 July 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Household Division

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an estimate of the overall financial cost of the Household Divison in fulfilling its public duties role over each of the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 19 February 1991 at col. 136.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate has been made of the contribution of the public duties activity of the Household Division towards the annual tourist income of the United Kingdom in each of the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These activities are widely recognised to be a tourist attraction but their value in terms of tourist income is not readily quantifiable.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what charge is made per man hour for the ceremonial work, including music, drill and musical rides, that is not directly in the service of the Crown, by members of the Household Division; and how much was generated from this source in each of the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All ceremonial duties undertaken by members of the Household Division are performed directly in the service of the Crown. Other musical and display performances are undertaken in support of approved recruiting and other official activities are charged for at rates to recover costs, which vary according to circumstances. Information about the income generated is not recorded centrally and would require disproportionate effort to produce.

Gulf War

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the men, equipment and ammunition of the two armoured brigades recently deployed in the Gulf war had to be added to the establishment of those brigades as at 2 August 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The peacetime establishment of 7th Armoured Brigade and 4th Brigade were increased by between two-thirds and three-quarters to bring them to war establishment, adjusted to take account of the circumstances of the Gulf deployment and in particular of the need for greater than normal logistic support. Equipment holdings were also brought up to war establishment and, for certain types, altered to take account of operational requirements in the Gulf; it is not possible to give an overall percentage.

Gurkhas

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the manpower figure he gave for the British Army in his announcement of 4 June, Official Report, column 143, included the Brigade of Gurkhas; and what allowance he made for the continuation of the Brigade of Gurkhas after 1997;

(2) what effect his decision to maintain the Brigade of Gurkhas until 1997 has on the number of other battalions of the British Army to be maintained.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The manpower figure given on 4 June included all Regular manpower, trained and untrained. I am not able to comment on the future of individual regiments, which is currently the subject of consultation within the Army.

Radiation Dosage

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report, the text of the letter of 13 June to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish concerning radiation dosage.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The text of the letter is as follows:

"Further to my reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions and my letter to you of 3 May regarding radiation dose exposures, I am now able to supply the final version of the dose information for the dockyards and naval bases. This is attached. I can confirm that it does not differ from the provisional data supplied with my previous letter".

Aircraft Shelters, Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to proceed with the construction of hardened aircraft shelters at RAF Stornoway.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The construction of the shelters is under discussion with the NATO authorities.

Compensation (Interim Payments)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Mr. Dennis Brown of New Park farm, East Anstey, will receive an interim payment in compensation for his free-range chickens, following Royal Air Force low-flying activities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Mr. Dennis Brown of New Park farm, East Anstey, will receive an interim payment within the next two weeks.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the practice of his Department in respect of making interim payments of compensation to persons whose cases have been taken up by hon. Members.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Interim payments are generally made to claimants where it has been shown that some financial hardship exists. It is departmental policy that all official action is suspended once cases have been taken up by hon. Members, while Ministers review the cases.

Tigerfish Torpedo

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to date of the Tigerfish torpedo programme; and if he will provide a breakdown of the costs attributable to (a) Tigerfish Mod. 01, (b) Tigerfish Mod. 1 and (c) Tigerfish Mod. 2.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 17 June 1991]: The total cost of development and production of Tigerfish to date is around £1 billion in 1991-92 prices. This breaks down as about £540 million for the MOD O, about £270 million for the MOD 1 and about £200 million for the MOD 2.

ENERGY

Electricity Prices

Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has held with the Office of Electricity Supply on the post-privatisation pricing system for industrial users of electricity; what representations he has received from industrial users on the pricing system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time when we discuss a range of matters including electricity prices. I have received a number of representations from industrial users about electricity prices. Under the new competitive regime we have put in place it is for large users to use their commercial strength to negotiate the keenest prices from a number of potential suppliers.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Church Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of children aged between 5 and 16 years being educated in church schools; and what were the comparable figures for 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Fallon: The number of children of compulsory school age being taught in maintained church schools in England in January 1990 is shown in the following table. Comparable figures for 1980 and 1985 are also shown.

Pupils of compulsory school age in maintained church schools

Type of school	1980	1985	1990

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 886, what information is available on a non-standard national basis about levels of truancy in (a) primary and (b) high schools.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not collected centrally.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers in full-time employment with seven years' experience are earning (a) £10,000 to £12,000, (b) £12,000 to £14,000, (c) £14,000 to £16,000, (d) £16,000 to £18,000, (e) £18,000 to £20,000, (f) £20,000 to £22,000, (g) £22,000 to £24,000 and (h) £24,000 to £26,000 per annum, or the nearest convenient salary break points.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the number of teachers in full-time employment with seven years' experience as at 31 March 1988 is shown in the table. Information for later years is not yet available.

English Teaching

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what was the cost of the report undertaken by Professor Ron Carter and others into the teaching of English;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report prepared by Professor Ron Carter and others on the teaching of English.

Mr. Eggar: The material commissioned, at a cost of some £120,000, was not a report but a training package for use as part of the language in the curriculum project. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Student Finance

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research he has commissioned into the financial position of students following changes in support, including the student loan scheme and the withdrawal of income support and housing benefit.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The take-up of student loans is monitored by the Student Loans Company and the Department. We intend to conduct periodically student income and expenditure surveys comparable with the baseline survey published in 1989, and to review the access funds scheme after three years.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce the postgraduate bursary and studentship rates payable by his Department for the academic year 1991-92.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The main maintenance rates under the Department's own postgraduate awards scheme in the academic year 1991-92 will be as follows (1990-91 rates are shown in brackets):

Bursaries
London	2,950	(2,775)
Elsewhere	2,330	(2,195)
Parental home	1,760	(1,655)

Studentships
London	4,970	(4,690)
Elsewhere	3,950	(3,725)
Parental home	2,915	(2,750)

These represent increases of about 6 per cent. on the current year's rates. The relevant supplementary allowances will be increased broadly in line.

PRIME MINISTER

Vietnam

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when the Government next plan to meet representatives of the Vietnamese Government; and when he next intends to discuss with the United States Government trading policy on Vietnam.

The Prime Minister: The Government are urgently seeking discussions with the Vietnamese Government on the problems posed by the sharply increased rate of arrivals of Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong. We regularly discuss all aspects of United States Indo-China policy at a high level with the United States Government.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Rent Rebates

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the levels of contributions to rent rebates that local authorities are projected to make that correspond to the figures for HRAS (Rent Rebate) subsidy for 1992-93, and 1993-94, set out in figure 64 in the housing chapter of the current public expenditure plans, Cm. 1508.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

As stated by my hon. Friend on 28 March at column 535 no decisions have been taken as to the contributions which local housing authorities are estimated to make to their rent rebate costs in 1992-93 and 1993-94. This is because the amounts will depend largely on annual decisions about rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances for those years. For general planning purposes, the entries at figure 64 in the housing chapter of Cm. 1508 include projected contributions to rent rebates of £420 million for 1992-93, and £536 million for 1993-94 based upon inflation only guideline increases for rent and management and maintenance allowances.

Pensioners' Expenditure

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 4 June, Official Report, columns 109-10, what information is kept on the levels of expenditure of pensioners; and to what extent this is broken down geographically.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on expenditure patterns is extracted from the family expenditure survey. While the published version does not give information on pensioners' expenditure below the national level the information can be broken down by region, although in many cases this can be achieved only at disproportionate cost while in others the size of the sample is too small to support a valid inference. The 11 regions in Great Britain are: the North, Yorkshire and Humberside, the North-West, the East Midlands, the West Midlands, East Anglia, Greater London, the South-East (excluding Greater London), the South-West, Wales and Scotland. Data can also be provided by type of administrative area, viz; Greater London, the Metropolitan district and Central Clydeside conurbation, non-metropolitan districts (with high population density) and non-metropolitan districts (with low population density), but the same caveats apply.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reply he has sent to the letters of 31 January and 10 June from the Terrence Higgins Trust concerning the cost of diets for people with AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have replied to these letters today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Africa (Food Shortages)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been allocated to counter food shortages in (a) Ethiopia, (b) Sudan, (c) Mozambique, (d) Angola, (e) Malawi and (f) Liberia from January to the present date; and what percentage of the 1990-91 and 1991-92 overseas aid budgets have been allocated to counter food shortages in each country.

Mrs. Chalker: The following bilateral food aid allocations to the named countries have been made since January 1991:

Country	Cost (£ million) (Food aid)	Cost (£ million) (Non-food aid)
Ethiopia	14·196	5·802
Sudan	10·959	3·626
Mozambique	3·000	2·000
Angola	0·700	1·885
Malawi (Mozambican refugees)	1·060	3·000
Liberia	0·0	1·456
Total	[1]29·915	17·769

[1] Does not include the United Kingdom share of EC food aid.

The remaining information is not available in the form requested. Bilateral food aid as a percentage of total bilateral aid to those countries in 1989-90 was as follows:

Country	Food aid £ million	Total aid £ million	Percentage
Ethiopia	5·182	12·730	41
Sudan	1·114	25·507	4
Mozambique	2·519	19·048	13
Angola	—	0·733	—
Malawi	—	26·965	—
Liberia	—	0·507	—

Vietnam

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been given to Vietnam in the last five years; and what is its current gross national product per head.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 20 June 1991]: Britain has provided no direct bilateral aid to Vietnam in the last five years. Since May 1990 over £1 million has been committed in support of projects by British non-governmental organisations to assist with community development and the reintegration of boat people returning from Hong Kong. Since 1986 the United Kingdom has provided some £2·4 million towards EC food aid to Vietnam and our contribution through the European Commission's pilot scheme for the reintegration of returning boat people will be more than £1 million. No reliable data exists for Vietnam's GNP but it is estimated that in 1988 GDP per capita was approximately US$150-200.

HEALTH

Day Nurseries

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what categories of day nurseries are exempt from registration.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The regulation and registration of day nurseries is currently governed by the Nurseries and Child-Minders Regulation Act 1948, as amended. Section 8 deals with exemption from the requirements of the Act, including registration.

The 1948 Act will be repealed when the Children Act 1989 comes into effect on 14 October 1991. Registration of day care facilities for young children will then be regulated under section 71 of and schedule 9 to the 1989 Act. Paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of schedule 9 list exemptions from registration.

Optical Charges

Mr. Wigley : To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now make provision for the refund of optical charges under the health benefits low income scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Refunds are already available under the low income scheme for NHS charges incurred for sight tests and also for spectacles provided by the hospital eye service. The review of the administration of the scheme which is now under way, will provide a fresh opportunity to examine the arrangements for optical refunds.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decisions were made at the European Community Health Council on 4 June concerning the campaign against AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The European Community Health Council agreed to adopt a plan of action within the framework of the Europe against AIDS programme. The intention of the plan is that member states should benefit from the exchange of information, expertise and examples of good practice.

A copy has been placed in the Library.

Births

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 322, if he can now list for the year 1989-90 for England and for each NHS region (1) the percentage of women who had (i) general anaesthesia, (ii) epidural or caudal anaesthesia, (iii) spinal anaesthesia, (iv) combinations of these methods of anaesthesia and (v) none of these methods of anaesthesia during labour or delivery;

(2) the percentage of women (i) whose labours were surgically induced, (ii) whose labours were induced by oxytocic drugs, (iii) whose labours were induced by a combination of surgical methods and oxytocic drugs, (iv) whose labours were of spontaneous onset and (v) who had elective Caesarian sections;

(3) the percentage of women whose deliveries were (i) at a domestic address, (ii) in a consultant ward of an NHS hospital, (iii) in a general practitioner ward of an NHS hospital, (iv) in a combined consultant/general practitioner ward of an NHS hospital, (v) in a private hospital, (vi) in another hospital or institution and (vii) elsewhere;

(4) the percentage of women whose deliveries were conducted by (a) a hospital doctor, (b) a general practitioner, (c) a midwife and (d) a person other than a doctor or midwife.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimated national percentages for England for 1989-90 are given in the tables. The feasibility of producing estimated percentages analysed by NHS region is still being investigated and I shall write to the hon. Member when our investigations are complete.

Pregnancy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money was given by which regional health authorities to (a) the British Pregnancy Advisory Service and (b) the Life Care and Housing Trust for the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No central record is kept of donations or grants made by regional health authorities. The British Pregnancy Advisory Service receives income as a result of service provision contracts with some district health authorities. Details of these arrangements are not held by the Department.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of operations and waiting lists for ear, nose and throat operations carried out year by year since 1986 in Trent regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 June 1991]: The information requested is given in the table. It is the time that individual patients wait for treatment that matters, not the total number on the list. The number waiting more than one year for in-patient ENT treatment in Trent has fallen by 8 per cent. since September 1986 and by 33 per cent. since March 1979. At the same time the number of in-patients treated has increased by 6 per cent. since 1986 and by 53 per cent. since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 June 1991]: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures include registered provision, local authority provision and for day nurseries and play groups some provision exempt from registration (eg provision on crown property).

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the financial adjustment fixed by each charging local authority in Wales for 1991-92 to be paid by each charge payer as a result of the failure, anticipated or actual, of all charge payers to pay charges lawfully demanded; and what were the comparable figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The collection fund adjustments payable by charge payers in 1991-92 are shown in the table. These adjustments reflect a number of factors including local authority assumptions as to any losses in collection in 1990-91 and estimates of interest paid from and accrued to the collection fund in 1990-91 and 1991-92. There are no comparable figures for 1990-91.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list total employment in the electronics and information technology industries in Wales in each year from 1979 to the most recent year available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are several sources of information for employment in the electronics industry over the past decade. The most complete series available is that of the Engineering Industry Training Board and are given in the following table.

Group Transport 2000 Plus Report

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications for Wales of the recommendations of the Group Transport 2000 Plus report on transport options for the future, published by the European Commission in January.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 20 June 1991 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Transport. My right hon. Friend will assess the implications for Wales of the EC Commission's paper on Community transport policy when it has been completed.

Community Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the advantages over the arrangements now operating in England of the proposed new grant scheme for promoting the development of more flexible forms of community care for elderly people and for people with physical or sensory disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This grant scheme has been introduced in 1991-92, for which we have announced allocations of £1·3 million to pump-prime innovation. It is too early to judge its effectiveness. Selected schemes will be subject to independent evaluation, along the lines of the existing arrangements to evaluate our earlier initiative to promote the development of innovative services for elderly people, with the aim of identifying and disseminating good practice. However, our main effort of assessment will go into the wider annual review of performance of social services and health authorities in developing effective social and community care, for which the principal means of Government financial support are, and will remain, the revenue support grant to local authorities and mainstream allocations to health authorities.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies receive copies of all circulars issued by his Department to local authorities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Those circulars issued by the Welsh Office to local authorities which deal with decisions or advice on important aspects of policy are distributed as a matter of course to hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies.

If the hon. Gentleman has experienced any difficulties with this arrangement perhaps he would write to my right hon. Friend so that my right hon. Friend can consider the matter further.

Video Recordings

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West of 18 June, Official Report, columns 96-97, if he will list those video cassette recordings purchased for use in conjunction with the video recorder installed in his flat at the Crown Buildings, Cathays park, Cardiff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

ENVIRONMENT

Wild Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responsibilities his Department has for (a) conservation, (b) transport and (c) the welfare of imported wild birds.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has numerous responsibilities for the conservation of imported wild birds under:

- the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora (CITES), and EC Regulation 3626/82, which implements the convention in the European Community;
- the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976;
- the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and
- EC Directive 79/409/EEC on the Conservation of Wild Birds.

Although these measures are primarily concerned with conservation, some contain subsidiary requirements relating to transport and welfare matters.

Community Charge

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the reasons for the discrepancy between the number of community charge payers of 41,900,000 registered for 1990 in England, Scotland and Wales and the Government's estimated size of the population aged 18 years and over of the same countries of 43,160,000.

Mr. Key: The difference of 1,260,000 between the number of people shown on community charges registers in Great Britain and the estimated population aged 18 years and over is largely attributable to the number of exempt people. We estimate that at least 870,000 people are exempt from the personal community charge, not including those who are exempt by virtue of living in short stay accommodation or because they have no fixed abode, for which no reliable information is available. Other factors affecting the comparison are: errors in the registers or under-registration; errors in reporting the numbers on the registers; errors in estimates of the adult population, which are based on the 1981 population census; and to a limited extent differences in timing and definition. It is not possible to quantify any of these factors.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, for each local authority levying a community charge in England and Wales, the sum shown in their respective demand statements following the words "plus other adjustments", stating the nature of all elements or charges comprising such adjustments together with his, or other estimate, of the proportion of the global sum attributable to the additional shortfall of income for the year 1990-91 and projected shortfall for 1991-92, respectively.

Mr. Key [holding answer 20 June 1991]: I am arranging for the available information for England to be placed in the Library of the House. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by year for the last 10 years, the countries which have made shipments of hazardous waste to England for disposal reported under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the importation of waste by country of origin into the United Kingdom is available only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988.

The information in respect of imports of waste for disposal in England for the financial years 1 April to 31March for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 is shown in the following table.

EMPLOYMENT

Energy Expenditure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for energy expenditure in 1989-90 and 1990-91 consistent with those given for 1988-89 in the answer of 30 April 1990, Official Report, column 448.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 June 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91 £ million
Electricity	6·558	6·651
Gas	2·628	2·578
Other	0·759	0·480

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 108, what information he can provide on energy consumption for 1989-90 and 1990-91 to update, on a comparable basis, the information given in his answer of 30 April 1990, Official Report, column 448.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 June 1991]: I regret that this information is not available for 1989-90. For 1990-91 I refer to my written answer of 3 June 1991.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Suicides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of suicides by inmates at prisons in England and Wales since 1 January.

Mrs. Rumbold: Between 1 January and 18 June 1991, 16 prisoners died at their own hand in prison service custody.

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to remove the need for people with a mental handicap in long-stay hospitals to complete a patient's declaration before they are allowed to register to vote; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to allow people with a mental handicap to use the addresses of their long-stay hospital as their residence for voting purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many residents in long-stay mental handicap hospitals are registered to vote;

(4) what plans he has to review the rule relating to voting for people resident in long-stay mental handicap hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Voluntary patients in psychiatric hospitals may register as electors in respect of any address with which they have been associated other than the hospital address. There are no plans to review this arrangement or the requirement for voluntary patients to make a declaration in order to register.

A total of 1,661 voluntary patients are included on the 1991-92 electoral register in the United Kingdom, broken down as follows:

	Number
England	883
Wales	164
Scotland	523
Northern Ireland	91

Work Permits

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances visas are granted for non-EC and non-Commonwealth residents to come to work in Britain for stays of a few weeks where payment is made by their employer in the country of origin; what assessment is made of the requirement for a work permit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Immigration Rules (HC 251 as amended) work permits are generally required by all non-EC nationals coming to work in the United Kingdom, irrespective of their length of stay or the source of their remuneration. Work permits are normally issued to employers only where jobs requiring high qualifications and skills cannot be filled by the EC labour force, and should be obtained from the Department of Employment before the person travels to the United Kingdom. The rules do, however, permit overseas-based people to enter without a work permit as business visitors in order to transact such business as attending meetings and briefings; negotiating contracts; delivering goods and, where necessary, installing and advising on the operation of their machinery here; or if they are sent by international companies to liaise with or advise United Kingdom subsidiaries. Business visitors who are nationals of the countries listed in the appendix to the rules must obtain a visa before travelling here.

Police Searches

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Leicestershire on the circumstances surrounding the search of the home of the hon. Member for Leicester, East's constituent Mr. Peach of 15 Rushey close, Leicester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1991, c. 371]: I now understand from the chief constable of Leicestershire constabulary that a search did take place at the home of the hon. Member's constituent. The search was made following the arrest of a member of the family on suspicion of theft. The person concerned was later released without charge.

TRANSPORT

Road Safety

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has conducted into the effects of glare from on-coming car lights on dual carriageways and motorways.

Mr. Chope: Trials were carried out in the early 1960s and in the late 1970s into the effects of anti-dazzle screens erected on the central reserves of sections of the M1 and M6 motorways. The M6 trial was covered by three reports, a report by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, social survey division No. SS 1058 of 1976; TRRL report SR 327 of 1977 and TRRL report No. 955 of 1980. Copies of these reports are in the Library of the House.

There is continuing concern about glare from on-coming lights on all types of roads, often resulting from the poor standard of aim of headlamps on vehicles. This is why new stricter checks on aim will be introduced shortly into the annual test for heavy goods vehicles and extended to cover private car testing as soon as possible.

Traffic Congestion

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been conducted by his Department into the effects on traffic congestion of building new roads or widening existing roads; and if he will ensure that such research is placed in the Library.

Mr. Chope: The effects on traffic congestion of building new roads or widening existing roads are a major element in the traffic and economic appraisals carried out by the Department for all improvements to trunk roads. The Department's methods of traffic and economic appraisal have been developed over many years, based on a continuing and substantial programme of research projects.

In the traffic and economic appraisal of road schemes, the effect on traffic flows, queues and speeds are estimated first; these are then valued through the time savings to business and private road users and the improved productivity of commercial vehicles. For schemes in the current roads programme, on average, the present value of benefits, discounted at 8 per cent., is 2·4 times the present value of costs.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been done by his Department into the savings on emissions from a reduction in congestion; and if he will publish the modelling and methodolgy used to calculate the relationship between emissions and traffic congestion.

Mr. Chope: The research evidence on road transport emissions of greenhouse gases is summarised in TRRL contractor report No. 223, "UK road transports contribution to greenhouse gases: a review of TRRL and other research", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. To predict the impact of individual schemes on congestion, the Department makes use of detailed traffic simulation models. The models make use of information on road link and junction characteristics to predict vehicle flows and speeds which can in turn be used to estimate fuel consumption and emissions. The Department has a substantial programme of research into this and other environmental issues.

Road Accidents

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of cars registered and in use; and how many car drivers were (a) killed and (b) injured in road accidents for each year in the periods (i) 1980 to 1983 and (ii) 1986 to 1990.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table. Road accident casualty data for 1990 is not yet available.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorcycles were registered and in use; and how many motorcyclists were killed in road accidents for each year in the periods (a) 1970 to 1973 and (b) 1986 to 1990.

Mr. Chope: The information is given in the following table. Figures are for two wheeled motor vehicles, which are motorcyles, motor scooters and mopeds. Road accident casualty data for 1990 is not yet available.

Although the number of motorcycles registered has declined, the use of these vehicles has increased. Total motorcycle traffic rose by an estimated 53 per cent. between 1970 and 1989.

Alnwick (Traffic)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the reduction in traffic within the Alnwick built-up area which would result from providing a direct access from the A1 to the A1068.

Mr. Chope: None.

Marine Radio-navigation

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement about the future of marine radio-navigation in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom has been negotiating over a period of time with eight other countries on the possible adoption of Loran C as part of a joint regional system of marine radio-navigation in north-west Europe and the North Atlantic. My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State told the House in April 1990 the conditions on which the United Kingdom would in principle have been prepared to enter into an international agreement if it could be achieved by mid-1991. Some but not all of those conditions have been met. But a new factor has been a revised proposal recently put to me by the Racal Electronics Company to modernise and operate the existing Decca chains in the United Kingdom at a lower cost than in their 1988 proposal.

I have examined the proposal carefully and Racal has made further improvements to it. I now have decided to accept the Racal proposal and to withdraw from the Loran C discussions. Two main factors have led to this conclusion. First, it is now very doubtful whether an international agreement could be concluded and brought into effect within a timescale which would both ensure a three-year transitional period before the closure of the United Kingdom Decca system (under the existing contract by early 1997) and avoid a price increase in the Loran C investment. Second, the revised Racal proposal means that the case has changed significantly in favour of retaining the Decca system, both in the overall economic appraisal and in the effect on light dues. After taking account also of the costs of a change for users, I have concluded that, despite some factors which point towards Loran C, it would no longer be reasonable to impose this change of system on the United Kingdom user community. In reaching this conclusion, I have had particular regard to the representations made to my by the fishing and electronics engineering industries against a change to Loran C, and to the fact that the Decca system continues to serve the mariners' needs satisfactorily within the overall requirements of marine safety.

Our partners in the international negotiations on the Loran C proposal are being informed of my decision. I now intend to invite the general lighthouse authorities to give effect to my decision by entering into formal negotiations with the Racal company on a new contract for operating the Decca system.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to seek the implementation of the new draft regulations on the operation of the orange badge scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce an implementation date for the new regulations governing the orange badge scheme for the disabled.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 June 1991]: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 21 March at column 212.

Speed Limits

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what recent discussions he has had with chief constables and others about the current level of speed limits on motorways.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 June 1991]: I have had no recent discussions with the police or others on this question but shall be meeting the M25 Chief Constables' Committee next month and will also be supporting the message of the forthcoming police national motorway campaign that drivers should drive safely and obey the law.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 17 and 18 June.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council took place in Luxembourg on 17 and 18 June. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council adopted the food credit regulation for the Soviet Union. It reached a political orientation on a regulation covering technical assistance for the Soviet Union and instructed the committee of permanent representatives to continue its work.

The Council agreed that participation in the negotiations on a European energy charter should be limited to European countries (including the USSR) and the non-European members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. The Council decided that other countries may accede to the Charter at a later stage and, together with representatives of international organisations, may be invited to attend the negotiations as observers.

The Council agreed on a mandate for the Presidency in its negotiations with EC staff unions on pay arrangements.

EC and EFTA ministers reviewed progress in the negotiations on a European economic area, which will extend the single market to the EFTA countries. Representatives of the two sides will meet again in Salzburg next week to discuss the next steps. The United Kingdom will continue to contribute constructively to these negotiations, with a view to their early and successful conclusion. We strongly support the idea of a European economic area, which will bring significant economic and practical benefits to the European Community and EFTA.

Ministers issued a statement welcoming the abolition of the Population Registration Act in South Africa. They also agreed that EC sanctions against Iraq should be maintained. They decided to give active support for the role of the UN in northern Iraq and to examine with the UN Secretary General what further humanitarian assistance could be provided for those in need in southern Iraq.

European Political Union

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ministeral meeting of the intergovernmental conference on political union on 17 June.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs attended the ministerial meeting of the inter-governmental conference on political union on 17 June. The meeting discussed the structure of the draft treaty on political union, competence issues, and the institutional chapter of the draft treaty.

On the overall structure of the treaty, member states and the Commission fall into two camps: those who would like to see a unitary structure with all the activities of the European union coming under the treaty of Rome and those like us who would prefer to see a common foreign and security policy and co-operation on interior/justice matters preserved outside the provisions of the treaty of Rome. The latest Presidency draft treaty is a compromise between these two positions, maintaining three separate pillars of co-operation but attempting to bring them together under a unitary structure. My right hon. Friend argued that, while ingenious, this remained undesirable. The discussion was inconclusive.

The Presidency has proposed the extension of Community competence in a number of areas. The meeting discussed both the principle and the practical details of these proposed extensions. My right hon. Friend emphasised that we were not convinced of the need to extend Community competence in the areas under discussion.

Discussion of the institutional chapter focussed on the proposed co-decision procedure between the Council and the European Parliament. A range of views was expressed.

Several member states thought a co-decision undesirable or unnecessary, others could accept the procedure proposed and some member states wished to see the European Parliament's legislative role expanded even further. My right hon. Friend made it clear we did not see a case for upsetting the existing institutional balance. My right hon. Friend also emphasised the importance we attached to ensuring the rule of law in the Community and argued for the United Kingdom proposals to strengthen the court of justice's powers to ensure compliance with its judgments.

Progress in the inter-governmental conference on political union will be reviewed by the European Council on 28-29 June.

Mr. Ramesh Kumar

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what evidence relating to the funding of two-way travel, as well as support and accommodation while in the United Kingdom, together with guarantees from the hon. Member for Hendon, North about Mr. Kumar's subsequent departure from the United Kingdom, would suffice to enable a temporary visitor's visa to be issued to Mr. Ramesh Kumar so as to enable him to make a visit to London at the suggestion of and for the purpose of consulting the hon. Member for Hendon, North about matters concerning Mr. Kumar's wife;

(2) what specific guarantees from the hon. Member for Hendon, North regarding departure after the termination of a visa for a temporary visit to the United Kingdom would be acceptable to enable Mr. Ramesh Kumar to make a visit to London at the suggestion of and for the purpose of consulting the hon. Member about matters relating to his wife.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The immigration rules do not require specific evidence to be produced in support of an application. The evidence necessary to satisfy an entry clearance officer will vary in individual cases according to the applicant's economic, social and other circumstances.

Libya

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations were received from the United States or any other country prior to his decision to reject the recent Libyan approaches for better relations with the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no such representations.

Liberia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the French Government about stopping the flow of arms from the Ivory Coast to Charles Taylor's forces in Liberia.

Mrs. Chalker: None, but my officials have regular contacts with the French Government at which a wide range of issues, including developments in west Africa, are discussed.

CIVIL SERVICE

Occupational Health Service

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made in preparing a strategic plan for the civil service occupational health service executive agency; and what performance targets have been set for its second year of operation as an agency.

Mr. Renton: The OHS prime financial target for 1991-92 is to recover its full costs by charging customers for its services. Its subsidiary targets are to provide its services at a cost of £472 per productive professional day, and at a cost of £25 per case referral. In addition I have set quality targets of 70 per cent. customer satisfaction rated as very good or excellent, tight turn-round times for case referrals, and the issue of 80 per cent. invoices without errors.

THE ARTS

Local Museums

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his response to the Audit Commission report "The Road to Wigan Pier" on the funding of local museums; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I welcome the Audit Commission's report, "The Road to Wigan Pier?" which makes a number of constructive recommendations for local authorities and their museums and galleries. Officials from my Department have had a constructive discussion with the Audit Commission on the report.

The Audit Commission's report covered similar ground to the recently published Museums and Galleries Commission report on local authorities and museums. I will be responding to that report in due course.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconcile the figures given in his answers of 3 June, Official Report, column 24, and 6 June, Official Report, column 326, concerning the total number of taxpayers with earnings above the national insurance upper earnings limit; and if he will publish figures separately for the number of employees who are basic rate taxpayers with earnings above the upper earnings limit.

Mr. Maude: My answer of 3 June provided the estimated numbers of taxpayers in 1991-92 analysed by range of earnings subject to national insurance contributions. Tax liability depends on the cumulative annual amount of income subject to income tax. The levels of earnings used in the analysis were the combined total from employment or self-employment for the whole year which were then compared with the annual equivalent of the NIC upper earnings limit. On this basis an estimated 1·9 million basic rate taxpayers whose main source of earnings is as an employee will have earnings above the UEL.

The answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 6 June showed the estimated average number of employees who, in any one week during 1991-92, will be liable for national insurance contributions and whose earnings will exceed the upper earnings limit. Additionally, the answer showed the estimated number of self-employed people who, during the year 1991-92, will be liable for national insurance contributions and whose profits will exceed the upper profits limit.

Money Laundering

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, columns 23-24, how many reviews of control system and accounting records in money laundering related areas of banks or other financial institutions, have been undertaken; what have been the conclusion of such reviews; and what action has been taken in light of this.

Mr. Maples: To date there have been some 160 reports on systems and controls related to money laundering commissioned under section 39 of the Banking Act 1987 as part of a rolling programme of identifying and prioritising particular areas of supervisory interest. Banks generally appear to have appropriate systems in place and have, in particular, been helped in formulating and implementing such systems by the publication at the end of last year of the guidance notes on money laundering for banks and building societies.

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the accumulated net receipts of income tax from building societies since 1985-86 and the amount affected by clause 50 of the Finance Bill 1991.

Mr. Maples: Accumulated net income tax receipts from building societies for the six years 1985-86 to 1990-91 were £18,097 million, excluding those subsequently repaid as a result of decisions by the courts. Of these, an estimated £227 million would be repaid if clause 50 were not enacted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in calculating the composite rate of tax for building societies and banks, for each year since 1985-86, if the Inland Revenue took account of the extra payments of income tax subject to clause 50 of the Finance Bill 1991.

Mr. Maples: Changes in the timing of tax payments by building societies, reflecting changes in collection arrangements of the kind introduced by the Building Society Regulations 1986, the subject of clause 50, had no bearing on the level at which composite rate was set. However, from societies as a whole there was slightly less income tax due for the financial year 1986-87 than would have been due if the timing arrangements had been left unchanged.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the contributory effects of changes in (a) interest rates, (b) volume, (c) tax rates and (d) the switch from the accrual basis to paid basis of receipts of tax on sums extinguishing liability to tax of building societies comparing 1985-86 with 1986-87 and 1986-87 with 1987-88 and 1985-86 with 1988-89.

Mr. Maples: I regret that the information could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates the cash flow effects to be of change from accrual to paid basis of extinguishing net tax liability of building society investors.

Mr. Maples: About £110 million less income tax was received in 1986-87 under the quarterly payment system than would have been due under the old system. However, under the new system, instalment payments amounting to £35 million were due in later years. The new system also affected cashflow within the tax year, by bringing forward the average date at which income tax was payable.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer taking the expected net receipts of income tax from a building society as an index of 100, what are the index estimates of the maximum and minimum additional payments, consequent on the Finance Act 1986 change retrospectively validating the 1985 regulations, assuming the enactment of clause 50 of the Finance Bill 1991, taking account of the effects of the range of society year end and payment dates.

Mr. Maples: Payments due in a year may be advanced or retarded under the new system introduced by the 1986 building societies legislation. At one extreme would be a hypothetical society with an accounting period ending on the first day of the tax year, 6 April, and crediting interest to investors wholly on a monthly basis on the last day of each month. For that society, income tax due on the 11 months' interest credited on 30 April 1985 to 28 February 1986, less that which had accrued in the first six days of April 1985, would be due in four instalments on the 14 March of the 1986-87 to 1989-90 tax years; tax would also be due in each of those tax years in respect of the 12 monthly creditings made between 31 March to 28 February. Taking income tax due for payment under the old system as an index of 100 for the four years together, tax due in those four years under the new system would be 122·5.

At the other extreme would be a hypothetical society with an accounting period coinciding with the tax year, and crediting interest to investors wholly on an annual basis, on 1 March. For that society, no payment of income tax under the new system would be due in the 1986-87 tax year, except in respect of interest on accounts closed up to 28 February 1987. The 1987-88 payment would be slightly less than in a full year. Taking tax due for payment under the old system as an index of 100 for the four tax years 1986-87 to 1989-90, tax due under the new system, if no accounts were closed, would be 72·5.

Economic Growth

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the rate of economic growth in the United Kingdom per quarter since October 1979.

Mr. Maples: Figures of the gross domestic product are available from the CSO database which may be accessed through the Library.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the income from North sea oil revenues received by the United Kingdom for each of the years from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Maples: Annual revenues to the Exchequer from the North sea have been as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	3,743
1981-82	6,492
1982-83	7,822
1983-84	8,798
1984-85	12,035
1985-86	11,348
1986-87	4,783
1987-88	4,618
1988-89	3,179
1989-90	2,393
1990-91	2,337

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the number of adult male full-time civil servants and the estimated number earning less than (i) half and (ii) two-thirds of the median hourly earnings of all full-time adult male workers on full-time rates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There were about 251,000 adult male full-time non-industrial civil servants on 1 April 1991, and about 49,000 adult male full-time industrial civil servants on 1 January 1991.

My Department does not collect information on actual earnings of individual civil servants. The available information closest to that requested, on the distribution of earnings of civil servants, is published in the New Earnings Survey 1990 part A table 1 and part B tables 36 and 52. A copy of these reports is in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactured Goods

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the percentage change by volume in United Kingdom exports of manufactured goods to the existing 11 other members of the EEC from 1970 to 1990; and what was the percentage change in volume of imported manufactured goods from the same countries in the same period.

Mr. Sainsbury: Statistics of global trade with individual countries are available in value terms only. However, volume indices for total United Kingdom trade in manufactured goods are published in the monthly publication "CSO Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library.

Internal Market Council

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council held in Luxembourg on 18 June.

Mr. Redwood: I attended the Internal Market Council on 18 June, the last of the Luxembourg Presidency. My right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) attended for the item on baggage regulation. A number of measures were agreed, and in particular, significant progress was made in two single market priority areas for the United Kingdom—public procurement and insurance.

In public procurement, there was agreement in principle to a common position on the directive on legal remedies in the utilities sector. This will ensure compliance with the directive agreed in 1990 on public procurement in this key sector (in the same way as a similar directive will ensure compliance with the earlier supplies and works directive).

The two insurance items agreed will pave the way for further progress towards the single market in insurance. Agreement on the directive on insurance company annual accounts provides a common framework of accounting rules for insurance undertakings, including Lloyd's. The second measure provides for an insurance committee to give expert assistance to the Commission in the exercise of implementing powers conferred by insurance directives, and to advise the Commission on the preparation of new proposals in insurance.

The Council also reached a common position on the draft regulation concerning checks on baggage of persons travelling on intra-Community flights or sea crossings. The Government successfully negotiated to retain essential United Kingdom frontier checks against drugs and other items. However, the United Kingdom still had significant objections relating to the infrastructural costs for airports and potential inconvenience to passengers; and to the proposed operative date of the regulation (1 January 1993). The Government therefore voted against.

The Council agreed to a common position on the regulation on the collection of intra-Community trade statistics. United Kingdom concerns that the proposed system would be burdensome to business were reflected in a Commission statement for the minutes.

The Council also adopted measures previously agreed at Council as common positions. These included the weapons directive (on which a common position was reached at the December Internal Market Council); two amendments to the directive restricting the marketing and use of dangerous substances (the 10th amendment adding cadmium, and the 11th amendment adding Ugilec 121, Ugilec 141 and DBBT); and the Council decision to release an additional 25 million ecu (£17·5 million) for the Community budget for small and medium-sized enterprises for 1990-93.

There were policy debates (without a vote taken) on a number of issues: the proposed second directive on diplomas; the proposed directive on sweeteners in foodstuffs; and the location of a Community trade marks office. The Council revisited the draft council resolution on trans-European networks, but Spain continued to seek additional finance for the proposal, preventing agreement to the draft resolution as it stands. The Presidency made progress reports on the draft regulation to create a supplementary protection certificate for medicinal products; and on the draft regulation to create a European company statute. All these subjects are likely to be considered again at future Councils.

Finally, the Commission presented its sixth annual report on implementation of single market measures, and the Luxembourg Presidency made a report on progress over the last six months towards completion of the single market. The United Kingdom, along with France and Denmark, were congratulated on their good implementation record for single market measures.

Radio Equipment

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to allow equipment submitted for type approval to be re-submitted for partial testing, where it can be technically shown that any adjustments could in no way affect the previous tests.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 June 1991]: Formal testing is carried out under strict national measurement accreditation service (NAMAS) accreditation requirements. Where the type test results in a report that shows that the equipment submitted fully meets the technical requirements of the appropriate specification or standard, a type approval certificate is issued to the applicant for type approval by the Radiocommunications Agency.

If, however, the equipment does not meet the appropriate technical requirements, at the request of the applicant, the type testing may be continued or terminated at that point. The equipment will then be returned to the applicant along with a complete or partial test report. The applicant who may be the manufacturer or importer will in most cases re-design, modify or adjust the equipment prior to making a new submission for formal type testing.

When re-design, modification or adjustment of equipment to rectify a failure mechanism for one parameter takes place it is possible that other parameters may be affected to a point where they would now result in a type test failure. It would place an unacceptable responsibility on test houses to expect them to make value judgments on the total effect of such rectification activities on the overall performance of a piece of equipment. In some instances it could result in a test house operating outside its (NAMAS) accreditation conditions. Thus the results obtained from a number of separate type tests will not be accepted for type approval certification.

This approach to type testing and approval is in conformance with current practice in other European Administrations.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for trade and Industry in what circumstances the Radiocommunications Agency issues type approval certificates to companies which are not equipped with the identical test equipment used for type approval testing.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 June 1991]: Type approval relates to an item of radio equipment submitted for type testing and approval against the appropriate specification or standard. The equipment submitted for type approval is required to be a representative sample of production equipment. Submissions for type testing are made by manufacturers or importers who are not assessed as to their technical abilities or access to technical facilities. Notwithstanding this the applicant has the responsibility to ensure that the equipment supplied to the market place complies fully with the specification or standard against which it was approved. Many large radio manufacturers have fully equipped and certified test laboratories which they use in the design and development of their products. However, smaller manufacturers and importers do not have the personnel, financial resources or suitable laboratory facilities to set up fully certified test facilities. In many cases they make use of external test facilities on a consultancy basis.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aflatoxins

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response his Department made to the proposal in the report of the 22nd session of the Codex Alimentarius Committee on Food Additives and Contaminants—March 1990—that the maximum level of total aflatoxins should be set at 10 micrograms per kilogram for all foods.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom and a number of other EC states made it clear at the Codex Committee on Food Additives and Contaminants that we favoured a limit of 4 micrograms per kilogram for nuts and figs and their products for sale for human consumption.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Food Advisory Committee's consideration of the possibility of a one part per billion limit on aflatoxin in nuts for sale for human consumption.

Mr. Maclean: The committee concluded that it would be unrealistic to establish a limit for aflatoxin of 1 part per billion (ppb) at present. It recommended that the following statutory limits should be introduced:

4 ppb total aflatoxin for nuts, dried figs and their products for sale, for incorporation in any compound food or for import for human consumption;

10 ppb for such imports intended for further processing before sale or incorporation in any compound food for human consumption.

The proposed limits of 4 ppb is as strict as any set by other EC member states.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when and in what form he will issue proposals for revised aflatoxin limits for consultation.

Mr. Maclean: We aim to consult on draft regulations under the Food Safety Act 1990 establishing maximum limits for aflatoxins in certain foods stuffs in the course of the next few months.

Canthaxanthin

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has consulted the United States Government regarding the use the canthaxanthin in food and feedstuffs.

Mr. Maclean: Scientists from this Department and the Department of Health have discussed the use of canthaxanthin in food and feedingstuffs with United States colleagues.

Fruit and Vegetables

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the expenditure in the United Kingdom under the common agricultural policy on (a) fruit and (b) vegetables, indicating whether the expenditure was on (i) export refunds, (ii) disposal measures, (iii) production support or (iv) other measures in each case; if he will list which fruits and vegetables were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This is an operational matter for the chief executive of the Intervention Board Executive Agency who will write to the hon. Member.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will permit the publication of research tests for BSE identification by Harash Narang on samples of bovine brain tissues supplied by his Ministry.

Mr. Gummer: Publication of the results of Dr. Narang's research is a matter for him and not the Government, but we would welcome it.

DEFENCE

Hong Kong

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes in deployment are planned for Her Majesty's ships based in Hong Kong.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In line with our overall intention to reduce the Hong Kong garrison in stages between now and 1997, all parts of the garrison are kept under continuous review.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has plans to pay off HMS Endurance; and whether there are any plans for a replacement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decision has been taken to decommission HMS Endurance. The requirement for a replacement is being considered. No decision has been taken.

Grenadier Guards (Accident)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps he took to satisfy himself beyond all reasonable doubt that the finding of the board of inquiry into the accident at Batus, Canada, on 7 July 1989 that no one is to blame for the incident was based upon proper investigation and well-founded evidence as heard by the board of inquiry;

(2) what steps he took to satisfy himself beyond all reasonable doubt that the finding of the board of inquiry into the accident at Batus, Canada, of 7 July 1989, that the soldiers were adequately briefed for the execution of their task was based upon proper investigation and well-founded evidence as heard by the board of inquiry

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry into the accident at the Batus range on 7 July 1989 was convened and conducted in accordance with the procedures laid down in Queens Regulations for the Army 1975 and the Board of Inquiry (Army) Rules 1956. The board's findings were considered and accepted by the relevant authorities in the chain of command.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which country accepted responsibility under paragraph 28 of part IV of the exchange of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Canada of 26 November 1979, for the clearance of, including the removal of unexploded rounds from, the area of land in Batus, Canada, upon which Grenadier Guardsmen Adrian Hicks, John Ray and Sean Povey were ordered to spitlock a trench on 7 July 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The general agreements in the exchange of notes under which United Kingdom forces use the Batus range are amplified by the range standing orders. These cover the clear-up procedures that take place after each exercise, including the requirement for the disposal of unused or unexploded munitions. The responsibility for the clear-up rests jointly with Batus staff and the forces who have undertaken the training exercise.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the date of entry into the Army of Guardsmen Sean Povey, Adrian Hicks and John Ray and their respective ages at the time.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not my Department's practice to release personal information without the prior consent of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a Minister last visited the training site in Canada where Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray were serving in June and July 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The last visit by a Minister to the Batus training area was made in July 1989 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) when Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received that the board of inquiry into the circumstances which led to the serious injuries of Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray in July 1989 be reconvened.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received several letters and questions from hon. Members on behalf of the three soldiers. The question of reopening the board of inquiry was also addressed in the House in an Adjournment debate on 3 June at columns 129-36.

I met Executive Council Members during my visit to Grand Cayman on 6 December 1990. I look forward to meeting the recently elected Chief Minister of Turks and Caicos Islands in London on 10 July. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the Premier of Bermuda on 27 November 1990 in London.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there will be anything pertaining to Gibraltar at the British pavilion at Expo 92 in Seville.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 10 June at col. 417. The theme of the British pavillion at Expo 92 will be "Original Britain". There is no plan to include exhibits based on specific geographical areas.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecutors

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what research the Government have carried out on whether the quality of service to the public would be better and costs lower if Crown prosecutors were granted extended rights of audience; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Research is at present confined to an initial assessment of the potential costs and savings to the CPS according to the range of options open to the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and training. No research is feasible as regards the qualitative effect of any decision by the advisory committee.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what is his latest estimate of the full costs to public funds involved in providing the services for a full year of (a) a Crown prosecutor, (b) a senior Crown prosecutor and (c) a chief Crown prosecutor.

The Attorney-General: The latest estimates of the full costs to public funds involved in providing the services of Crown prosecutors for a full year, including accommodation costs and notional superannuation contributions are as follows:

	In London	Outside London
(a) a Crown Prosecutor	£36,868	£29,404
(b) a Senior Crown Prosecutor	£42,225	£34,306
(c) a Grade 4 Chief Crown Prosecutor	£67,424	£59,281
a Grade 5 Chief Crown Prosecutor	—	£53,056

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what is his estimate of the number of salaried Crown prosecutors who appear in court as advocates on each sitting day.

The Attorney-General: No collected figures are available in respect of the number of salaried Crown prosecutors who appear in court each sitting day. In the financial year 1990-91 some 246,000 sessions in the magistrates' courts were covered by salaried Crown prosecutors. Assuming 250 sitting days in a year, the estimated average number of salaried Crown prosecutors appearing as advocates each day is 1,000.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current annual cost of the Crown prosecution service; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The current estimated annual cost of the Crown prosecution service for 1991-92 is £229,923,000. Further details were published in "Supply Estimates 1991-92" class X, votes 5 and 6.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he is able to give an estimate of the number of hours per week spent in court, excluding waiting time, on average, by a Crown prosecutor and a senior Crown prosecutor respectively.

The Attorney-General: No specific figures are available of the average number of hours per week spent in court by Crown prosecutors. The best estimate that can be made is a figure of about 15 hours per week for both Crown prosecutors and senior Crown prosecutors. Waiting time is not a significant factor—full list advocacy by Crown prosecutors results in efficient use of resources and reduces waiting time to a negligible level.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what proportion of advocates appearing in magistrates' courts on behalf of the Crown prosecution service on an average day are (a) counsel from the independent Bar instructed (i) on a case-by-case basis and (ii) otherwise, (b) solicitors in private practice instructed (i) on a case-by-case basis and (ii) otherwise, (c) salaried members of the Crown prosecution service and (d) other advocates.

The Attorney-General: Exact figures giving the proportions requested are not available. The estimated proportions for the financial year 1990-91 are:

(a) (i) 2 per cent.
(ii) 15 per cent.
(b) (i) and (ii) 17 per cent.
(c) 66 per cent.
(d) 0 per cent.—an insignificant number of cases is handled by advocates from other Government Departments on behalf of the Crown prosecution service where a joint prosecution arises.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what additional cost to public funds is involved in providing the services of a Crown prosecutor stationed in central London as against one stationed in Manchester.

The Attorney-General: The latest estimate of the additional cost to public funds involved in providing the services of a Crown prosecutor stationed in central London as against one stationed in Manchester is £7,464.

We have supported a number of initiatives to educate young people at risk and to inform adults, including parents, professional workers and retailers who may become involved.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have received representations from the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells) and from the Gowerton branch of Plaid Cymru concerning the location of the Royal Mail administrative headquarters for the combined south Wales and south-west England area. We understand that Royal Mail will not be transferring its total divisional administrative base into one location. There will be several outstanding administrative units. Police (Misconduct)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the amount of compensation paid to civilians by the Metropolitan police in each of the last three years following complaints.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Compensation payments may be made as the result of court proceedings or in out-of-court settlements, or when civil action has been suggested but not pursued. The matter concerned may not be such as to provide grounds for a complaint made under the terms of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Compensation payments totalling £388,000, £523,000 and £836,000 were paid in 1988, 1989 and 1990 respectively.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of police officers dismissed from the Metropolitan police force for breaches of discipline, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of officers dismissed from the Metropolitan police following disciplinary proceedings is published each year in the annual report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of police officers serving in the Metropolitan police force who are now suspended from duty pending inquiries as to their conduct as police officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that there are at present 72 officers suspended from duty in the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of official complaints made against police officers serving in the Metropolitan police force, in each of the last three years; and how many have been upheld after inquiries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of complaints made against officers of the Metropolitan police under the terms of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, together with the number of complaints completed, are published in the annual report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. The Commissioner's 1990 report contains figures for the last three years.

The number of complaints substantiated in 1988, 1989 and 1990 are 184, 103 and 172 respectively.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) project licence and (b) personal licence applications rejected since the provisions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 came into operation.

Mrs. Rumbold: The vast majority of project licence applications and many personal licence applications are discussed in detail at an early stage with the Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate. Many are revised and redrafted as necessary into a form which the inspector considers acceptable.

The normal procedure is for applications, mainly for project licences, to be withdrawn or not to be proceeded with in those cases where their justification is considered insufficient or where the applicant feels unable to refine the proposed procedures to an extent that the inspector is satisfied that it would be appropriate to advise my right hon. Friend that a licence should be granted. This means that it is only very rarely necessary to refuse an application formally.

Performance Indicators

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to involve consumer views in the development of performance indicators.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Consumer views are taken into account, either directly or indirectly, in developing performance indicators, particularly those which measure quality of service to the public.

Of those operational services which the Home Office does not control, police forces consult local communities, often through opinion surveys, to obtain public views on police performance and worries about crime; fire brigades take pains to ensure that they have the views of the communities they serve and the fire service is currently looking at a scheme for introducing performance measures nationally, some of which will include measures of public satisfaction.

Of those services which the Home Office provides itself, the immigration service and the nationality division take account of consumer views, albeit less directly, in setting their performance targets; an opinion survey conducted last year by the Passport Agency led to the setting for this year of a target for customer satisfaction; Forensic Science Service Agency targets for turnround times for cases were set in consultation with its customers.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what performance indicators are published for his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Details of performance indicators for Home Office departments and services are published in the Home Office annual report 1991 (Cm 1509). For details of performance indicators for Home Office agencies (the Passport Agency and the forensic science service) I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Cornwall, North (Sir G. Neale) and for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 27 March at columns 469-70.

Foreign Countries (Entry of British Citizens)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy on the passing of names of British citizens to foreign Governments for the purpose of warning those Governments that these citizens should not be granted entry to those countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the interests of international co-operation on law enforcement the names of people of whatsoever nationality may be passed to the authorities in other countries, for example for the purpose of taking forward an extradition request. All decisions over the granting of entry are the responsibility of the country concerned.

Victim Support

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the financial help needed by Manchester's victim support schemes to avert closure; what representations he has had about their urgent need for alternative funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office grant for local victim support schemes, which has increased by 20 per cent. from £4·5 million last year to £5·4 million this year, is administered by Victim Support under criteria which have been revised this year to allow grants for both salaries and running costs to be paid to schemes which are in danger of closure. Applications from a number of Manchester schemes are being considered by Victim Support nationally.

We have received representations about the funding of Manchester schemes from local Members of Parliament, district councils, representatives of Victim Support and the police.

Immigration

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now in a position to determine the application for British citizenship, reference

IMPH330480/4 (S) which was first raised with his Department on 27 April 1989; on what date he requested from the embassy in Islamabad the confirmation that entry clearances for settlement had been issued and when that confirmation was received; whether all outstanding routine inquiries in this cases have now been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A final decision on this application was delayed while we obtained evidence that the applicant met the statutory requirements regarding residence in the United Kingdom. With this in mind we wrote to the British High Commission in Islamabad on 21 December 1990 for details of entry clearances issued to the applicant and her daughter in 1982. This information was received at the beginning of February 1991. From that and from information supplied by her solicitors we are now satisfied that the application may be granted, subject to her making an affirmation of allegiance. Her daughter will also be registered as a British citizen.

Prisoners

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to publish guidelines concerning remission for people imprisoned for poll tax non-payment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will (a) outline what guidance his Department has circulated to prison governors concerning poll tax imprisonment, (b) list the circulars and the dates of their distribution and (c) place a copy of each in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: Guidance circulated to governors on 12 June advised that terms of imprisonment for non-payment of the community charge are not eligible for reduction by remission or remand time. A copy of this instruction is being placed in the Library together with prison standing order 12 which gives full details of the terms of imprisonment that do not attract remission on remand time. A revised version of the standing order, to be published in a few months' time, will include reference to the community charge.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which categories of prisoners are allowed access to a telephone while in prison; and if he will list those of Her Majesty's prisons which have (a) payphones and (b) cardphones; what plans he has to improve access to phones; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Cardphones for use of convicted inmates have been installed in the category C and D, and equivalent female and young offender, establishments listed in the following table.

At all establishments inmates may have access to an official telephone with the permission of the governor in special circumstances.

On 25 February my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, announced on publication of the Woolf inquiry report that cardphones would be provided in all those establishments which do not already have them. This programme is being taken forward as quickly as resources permit.

There are no ordinary payphones designated for inmates' use except at Haslar in respect of those persons detained under the Immigration Acts.

Bailiffs

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), 17 May 1991, Official Report, column 284, he is now in a position to place a copy in the Library of the guidance notes for use of bailiffs by magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: Best practice guidance on the use of bailiffs by magistrates courts should be available shortly, and I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Mink Farms

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licensed mink factory farms there are in Scotland; and if he will publish the names of the parliamentary constituencies in which they are located.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are two licensed mink farms in Scotland, one in Strathclyde region and the other in Grampian region. More precise information is not published.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of fishing vessels by port (a) over 400 hp and (b) below 400 hp.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table for the base districts of active Scottish-based fishing vessels. Base districts are defined as the district in which the majority of the owners of the vessels live. District figures include vessels from a number of small ports and creeks in addition to those from the main port on which the district is centred.

Salmon

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the consequences to the Scottish salmon farming industry of uncontrolled imports from Norwegian producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received representations from a number of hon. Members and from salmon farming companies in Scotland.

The Government understand the industry's concern about the current state of the market for farmed salmon. We are anxious to ensure a satisfactory and stable long-term future for the industry and are working closely with it to that end.

A74 (Archaeological Sites)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps are being taken to safeguard archaeological sites identified in the course of development of the M74—A74;

(2) what funds his office has made available, and to which organisations, in connection with emergency archaeological investigation of sites along the proposed development of the A74;

(3) for how long the Lintshie Gutter site will be available to archaeologists engaged in emergency investigation of the site.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The upgrading of the A74 to motorway standard has provided an unexpected opportunity to discover some of Scotland's past. Throughout the development of the project the Scottish Office's roads directorate has liaised closely with Historic Scotland, an executive agency within the Scottish Office responsible among other things for the protection of ancient monuments. Every effort has been made in determining the line of the motorway to avoid disturbing sites of archaeological importance. In eight locations where this has not been possible, archaeological surveys and excavations have been carried out in advance of the road construction. Without the impetus of the motorway these important examples of Scotland's heritage might have remained hidden for many years to come.

Funds amounting to £100,000 have been granted by the Scottish Office towards archaeological surveys and excavations along the line of the motorway. In addition, Historic Scotland has made a contribution of £75,000. Apart from a small element of survey and monitoring carried out by the Biggar Museum trust, all the work has been undertaken by Archaeology Projects Glasgow (APG) which is a research group set up within Glasgow university archaeologist department to manage fieldwork and consultancy studies for Government and industry.

It is expected that the excavation of the Lintshie Gutter site will be completed by the end of June. The site will remain available for some months beyond that.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his replies to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, Official Report, 14 June, column 713, what information he has on whether clinical waste incinerators in the national health service in Scotland are effectively complying with current pollution control legislation; and when the last report of inspection of the clinical waste incinerators was submitted to him.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am aware that three clinical waste incinerators in the national health service in Scotland are experiencing difficulty in complying with current pollution control legislation. No report of inspection of clinical waste incinerators has been submitted to my right hon. Friend; powers to control emission standards are vested in local authorities.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations took place with the chairmen of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, English Nature and the Countryside Council for Wales, and the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland, in advance of the introduction of provisions for the establishment of an advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest in the Natural Heritage (Scotland) Bill.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Consultations took place between the Scottish Office Environment Department and the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland, the Government's statutory adviser on nature conservation in Scotland, before the amendments introducing these provisions were tabled. Since the committee relates exclusively to Scotland and its establishment does not affect the SSSI procedures laid down in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, no consultation with English Nature and the Countryside Council for Wales was necessary. As the advisory committee can deal only with individual cases within the site guidelines overseen by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and there will be no overlap in membership, it was not necessary to consult the JNCC chairman.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland of the total number of sites of special scientific interest in Scotland (a) how many were objected to at the point of notification and (b) how many were objected to subsequent to notification; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 June 1991]: As at 31 March 1991, 1,319 sites of special scientific interest had been notified in Scotland. A right of objection was introduced by the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, which came into effect on 26 August 1985. The Nature Conservancy Council's latest available figures are that 541 sites were confirmed during the period from 1 August 1985 to 30 November 1990 and that representations or objections were received in respect of 153 of those sites. The detailed information about the stage at which objections were received is not available.

Scottish Action on Dementia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Scottish Action on Dementia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have this week received a report "Dementia in Scotland: Agenda for Action 1991-95".

Since the publication of the report "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the 80s" (SHAPE) in 1980, which drew attention to the need to develop services for this care group, the Government have given high priority to the development of such services in Scotland and now accord their development top priority. Since 1981 health board expenditure on services for elderly people with dementia has increased by 61·5 per cent. in real terms and it continues to rise.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses were available for rent by local authorities in Scotland in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 June 1991]: Information on the numbers of dwellings owned by local authorities is given in table 2 of statistical bulletin HSG/1991/4, "Housing Trends in Scotland—Quarter ended 31 December 1990". Copies were sent to all Members representing Scottish constituencies and are available in the Library.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the total number of domestic customers of Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric, respectively (b) how many of those individual customers, not including other members of their family or household, have bought shares in the recent privatisation and (c) how many of those customers have given postal addresses outside Scotland for correspondence about shares.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 June 1991]: Scottish Power plc and Scottish Hydro-Electric plc respectively have around 1,600,000 and 530,000 domestic customers. Information on the numbers of those individuals who have purchased shares in the two companies or have given correspondence addresses outwith Scotland is not separately available, since customer preference under the share offers extended to include other members of their family or household. The share registers of both companies will be publicly available from 3 July.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the titles of the video recordings purchased by his Department during the financial year 1990-91 and 1991-92 to date.

Civil Service Transfers

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employees of the Northern Ireland civil service have applied for a job transfer and have stated Newry (i) as their first preference or (ii) as a preference other than first preference.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of non-industrial staff in the Northern Ireland civil service who have applied for a transfer and have stated Newry as:

(i) first preference is 159; and
(ii) as preference other than first preference is 66.

Social Security Agency

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will make an announcement about the establishment of the social security agency.

Mr. Brooke: The social security agency was launched this morning and will be formally established on 1 July 1991. I have made arrangements for copies of the framework document and the business plan, which includes challenging quality of service and efficiency targets, to be placed in both Houses of Parliament.'

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Child Protection

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the amounts allocated to local education authorities to enable them to carry out the training initiatives on child protection and child abuse under the new Children Act 1989, as described in consultative paper No. 22 "Working Together".

Mr. Fallon: The consultation paper is concerned with inter-agency co-operation, and emphasises the importance of joint training under the auspices of area child protection committees. Local education authorities and schools may choose to make specific provision for training teachers and certain other education staff in matters relating to child protection, drawing as appropriate on the support available under our programme of grants for education support and training. However, their allocations for this purpose cannot be readily quantified.

Polytechnics and Colleges Employers Forum

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the total expenditure of the polytechnics and colleges employers forum for 1989-90 and 1990-91 was spent on entertainment.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This is not a matter for Her Majesty's Government.

TUC Courses

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the level of departmental funding of the Trades Union Congress for educational purposes; what criteria determine the continuity of that funding; which section of his Department is responsible for vetting materials used on TUC training or education courses which use departmental funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: This Department does not provide any funds for the TUC for educational purposes.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in respect of the student loans scheme, (i) the most recent figure for loan applications received, (ii) the number of loans made, (iii) the value of loans made and (iv) total costs incurred administering the scheme.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As at 20 June 1991 over 181,000 students had applied for a loan from the Student Loans Company Ltd. Over 153,000 loans had been issued, with a total value of £59·2 million.

Between September 1990, when the scheme became operational, and 31 May 1991, the company's running costs were £7·73 million, exclusive of VAT.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he has taken following his letter of 31 May to the Professional Footballers Association to bring together the Football Association, the Football League and the Professional Footballers Association to discuss plans for the future of football; what further measures he intends to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 June 1991]: I have had detailed discussions with each of the three bodies and have indicated to all of them that I stand ready to help, in an impartial manner, if the three organisations wish me to do so. In pressing the need for unity and for football to speak with one voice I have made it quite clear that the resolution of the various differences is for football alone.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue in court challenged the Woolwich tax model of the effects of regulations 3 and 11 (1985).

Mr. Maples: Yes. The Inland Revenue did not accept the conclusions of the Woolwich building society based on its hypothetical tax model.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the dates beginning and ending the financial years for which building societies' payments of members' income tax in (a) January 1984, (b) January 1985 and (c) January 1986 satisfied the Inland Revenue and the dates beginning and ending the period of deduction of tax to which the 1985, 1986 and 1991 legislation and regulations are directed; and if he will now add the information to a simple chart and place it in the Library.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 June 1991]: Payments of tax by building societies in January 1984, 1985 and 1986 under the former annual accounting arrangements satisfied their liability under those arrangements for the tax years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 respectively.

The Building Societies Regulations 1986, to which the 1985, 1986 and 1991 legislation relates, required societies to account for tax from 1986-87 onwards at the end of each quarter. In addition, under transitional provisions, societies were required to account for the tax on interest paid to their investors in the gap period between the end of their accounting period in 1985-86—which formed the basis for the January 1986 payment under the annual arrangements—and 5 April 1986.

I have placed a chart explaining the sequence of events in the Library.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the balance of trade with (a) the other countries of the EC and (b) the rest of the world in (i) visible and (ii) invisibles in 1990 as a balance of payments basis; and if he will add the figures for imports and exports.

Mr. Mellor: Information about visible trade with the EC and the rest of the world in 1990 on a balance of payments basis can be found in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", available in the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database which may also be accessed through the Library. Comparable information about invisible trade will be published on 4 September in the 1991 edition of "The CSO Pink Book."

Insolvency Service

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his responsibilities in respect of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Maples: Department of Trade and Industry Ministers determine and answer to Parliament on the general policy framework within which the Insolvency Service executive agency operates. The Treasury has a number of specific responsibilities as set out in the Insolvency Act 1986 for certain issues of finance, accounting and investment (part XIV sections 404-5 and 407-9) and for certain fees (part XV sections 414-5). The Treasury also has certain other order-making powers (part XV section 422); and the Insolvency Service executive agency is subject to Treasury staff inspection.

Tour Operators

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations underlay his decision to continue to operate the tour operators' margin scheme.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The United Kingdom is obliged, under article 26 of the EC sixth VAT directive, to have a special scheme for taxing tour operators' margins.

Income Tax

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1991-92 and in a full year of the introduction of a 50 per cent. top rate of income tax on annual taxable income above (a) £42,000, (b) £47,000, (c) £52,000 and (d) £57,000.

Mr. Maude: The yield in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income is estimated to be (a) £1·7 billion, (b) £1·5 billion, (c) £1·4 billion and (d) £1·2 billion. The corresponding yields in 1991-92 are (a) £0·9 billion, (b) £0·8 billion, (c) £0·7 billion and (d) £0·6 billion.

No account is taken of possible behavioural changes or of any effect on receipts of capital gains tax.

Lloyd's Underwriters

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the tax concessions available to members of Lloyd's insurance syndicates which may be set against income from sources other than underwriting profits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A Lloyd's underwriter carries on the business of insurance, and if he makes a loss in that business, he is entitled to effectively the same reliefs for a trading loss as any other trader. He may set the trading loss against his income from other sources of the same year his income from all sources of the previous year his income from underwriting in a later year.

The Government have proposed that in common with all other traders, trading losses for 1991-92 and later years may be set against capital gains.

The only difference between the reliefs for losses of Lloyd's underwriters and those of other unincorporated traders is that Lloyd's is able to set off losses against total income of the same year and the previous year. Other traders are able to set off losses against total income of the same year and the succeeding year. This difference merely reflects the fact that Lloyd's is taxed on a current year basis whereas other trades are taxed on the preceding year basis.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the cost of annual premiums for stop-loss insurance policies available to Lloyd's underwriters are set against tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: An underwriter is entitled to deduct the cost of stop-loss policies in computing his taxable profits. He is also required to include any recoveries under a stop-loss policy as income in computing his profits. The position is no different from the tax treatment of comparable insurance policies taken out by other trades.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of any recent proposals of the presidency of the Council of Finance Ministers of the European Communities relating to the harmonisation of value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I wrote to the hon. Gentleman on Wednesday 19 June to bring him up to date on the position we have reached in the indirect tax negotiations in Europe. I attached to my letter a note summarising the previous proposals for the approximation of indirect taxes and the compromise proposals to be presented by the Luxembourg presidency to ECOFIN on 24 June, and an annex giving full details of the presidency proposals.

My letter and its attachments were placed in the Library on Friday 21 June. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will report the meeting of the ECOFIN in Council on 24 June to the House in the normal way.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are awaiting radiotherapy treatment in the Sunderland, Hartlepool and Durham area health authorities; how many were on the lists for treatment in each year since 1986; and what is the average waiting time for treatment in each of these years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been no in-patients waiting for radiotherapy treatment at hospitals in these three districts since 1986. Figures on patients waiting for out-patient treatments are not held centrally.

Aflatoxin

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the scientific evidence held by his Department on whether aflatoxin is a human carcinogen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The most recent scientific publications held by the Department on the human carcinogenicity of aflatoxins are:

1. WHO (1979). Environmental Health Criteria 11. Mycotoxins. World Health Organisation, Geneva.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements there are for the repair of wheelchairs for a disabled person staying away from his or her home area; and whether he will provide a list of approved repairers for each regional health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: As individual contracts are negotiated by health authorities, a list of approved repairers is not held centrally. All contracts with approved repairers cover work on NHS-supplied wheelchairs for both resident users and those visiting the area. Visitors may, however, need to contact the local disablement services centre to obtain details of the appropriate approved repairer.

Perinatal and Infant Mortality

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the rates of perinatal mortality and infant mortality for Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham in 1981 and for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The table lists the perinatal and infant mortality rates for the London borough's of Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham in 1981 and 1990.

Perinatal and infant mortality rates for the London Borough's of Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham, 1981 and 1990

Registered Homes Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of owners of private care or nursing homes who had their registrations cancelled under the Registered Homes Act 1984 during 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has been notified of 30 residential care home owners and 16 nursing home owners who had their registrations cancelled during 1990.

Diabetes

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department plans to take to recognise World Diabetes Day on 27 June and to implement the measures agreed in the St. Vincent declaration of October 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department's chief medical officer has sent a message of encouragement to mark World Diabetes Day. The recommendations in the St. Vincent declaration for the care of people with diabetes in Europe have been incorporated in the Government's Green Paper "The Health of the Nation". We have invited comments on these with a view to the possible development of targets for this country.

GP Lists

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average general practitioner list size; and what it was in 1978-79.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 1 October 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, the average general practitioner list size in England was 1,942. The corresponding figure for 1979 was 2,286.

Food Additives

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to publicise the adverse effects on many children of sodium salt of benzoate (E211) in view of its use as a preservative in many popular branded drinks.

Mr. Dorrell: None. Sodium benzoate (E211) is a permitted preservative listed in schedule 1 of the Preservative in Foods Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 533). The levels of sodium benzoate in foods are strictly controlled. Studies commissioned by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food of a number of additives, including sodium benzoate, have found the overall incidence of intolerance reactions to be very low. As its presence as an additive in food must appear on the product label those who consider themselves adversely affected can avoid foods containing this preservative.

Pregnancy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of ectopic pregnancies in each of the last 25 years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 June 1991]: The figures for each year since 1979 are given in the table.

Estimated number of episodes where Ectopic pregnancy (ICD 633) is the principal diagnosis.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the unemployment figures for Waveney in (a) May 1987 and (b) May 1991 as a whole and as a percentage of the work force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: In May 1991 the number of unemployed claimants, not seasonally adjusted, in the Waveney parliamentary constituency was 3,423. This compares with 5,847 in May 1987, a fall of 41·5 per cent.

Official unemployment rates are not available for parliamentary constituencies. The smallest areas for which unemployment rates are calculated by the Department are travel-to-work areas. These are broadly self-contained labour markets in which at least 75 per cent. of the people who work in the area, live in the area and vice-versa.

TUC Publications

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will obtain a copy of the Trades Union Congress booklet, "Working Women," and place a copy in the Library, marking the passages which were considered by his Department as tendentious; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the Trades Union Congress publications designed for education or training courses to which he has objected being part of courses which attract financial support from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Government have always made it clear that they are not prepared to provide financial support under the trade union education and training grant for booklets which engage in political controversy. The booklet "Working Women" contained a number of passages which were openly critical of Government policy. When these passages were drawn to the attention of the TUC, it agreed that they were not appropriate in a booklet financed by public money. Since the TUC has now withdrawn the booklet, no purpose would be served by placing a copy in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Drink-Driving

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the 1991 research findings on the 1990-91 anti-drink driving advertising campaign.

Mr. Chope: Copies of the 1991 research findings on the Department of Transport's 1990 anti-drink driving advertising campaign have been placed in the Library.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to implement the draft regulations published in April 1990, pursuant to the review of the orange badge parking scheme for persons with disability.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 21 March at column 212.

Public Transport

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to increase the use of public transport and to reduce traffic congestion.

Mr. Chope: The Government are supporting massive investment to improve facilities on British Rail and the London Underground, and are giving grant to two new light rail systems. A network of priority red routes is proposed in London to keep traffic moving. A working group has been set up with the bus industry, the local authorities and the police to encourage bus use and the development of bus priority measures. We are also commissioning wide-ranging research into urban traffic congestion, including the possibility of road pricing.

Road Proposals Display, Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for displaying the proposals for the East India Dock road/Canning Town bridge and A13 flyover scheme at a venue in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Chope: We are investigating the possibility of displaying our proposed exhibition at the Aberfeldy estate after it has been shown at the Mayflower centre, Canning Town.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investment he has approved for British Rail services on the Eltham and New Eltham lines of Network SouthEast.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend announced approval on 19 June of investment in 188 Networker vehicles at a cost of £127 million. He had previously announced approval for 86 Networker vehicles on 13 May at a cost of over £67 million; 400 class 465 Networker vehicles for Kent link routes were approved in August 1989. The first of these is due to be delivered to British Rail in September this year. The new trains will begin to come into service on Kent link routes, which include Eltham and New Eltham, during the first few months of 1992.

London Transport (Salaries)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what percentage the salary of (i) the chairman and (ii) the board of directors as a whole of London Transport increased in the year 1990-91 on 1989-90; and what is the projected percentage increase in 1991-92 on 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: The salary of the chairman of London Transport was increased by 25 per cent. and that of the deputy chief executive by 13·7 per cent. from 1 April 1990; these increases reflected additional responsibilities each had previously assumed. Other board members received increases of 8·5 per cent. or 8·6 per cent. My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet considered proposals for pay increases for members from 1 April 1991.

M40

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present surface texture of the grooved concrete surface of the M40 between junctions 1 and 2 measured by the sand patch method; and what was the value of the surface texture in 1973.

Mr. Chope: The sand patch method of measuring texture is not appropriate to grooved concrete surfaces. The specification for measuring grooved concrete is to measure the depth of the grooves. On the M40 between junctions 1 and 2 the average depth is 3·6 mm.

The records from 1973 are no longer available.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the consultants' report on the proposed widening of the M40 between junctions 1 and 4; when public consultation will begin; and whether the consultants' terms of reference include the submission of measures to ameliorate the noise nuisance from this stretch of motorway.

Mr. Chope: We expect the consultants to submit their preliminary report appraising the options for increasing the capacity of this length of motorway towards the end of this year. That appraisal will include measures to mitigate the effects of the improved road on the local environment. A decision on the preferred widening option is expected to follow in the spring of 1992. The procedures to be followed from that stage will depend on the scale and nature of the works proposed.

Maritime Safety

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which countries are signatories to the international convention on standards of training, certification and watchkeeping for seafarers 1978.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are now 82 countries which are signatories to the international convention on standards of training, certification and watchkeeping for seafarers 1978. I have placed International Maritime Organisation circular STCW/circular 76, which lists the countries concerned together with circulars 77, 79, 80, 81, 82 and 84 which give the most recent accessions, in the Library.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of foreign ships inspected in British ports in each of the last five years under the provisions of the 1982 memorandum of understanding to secure compliance of ships with international standards and indicate (a) how many ships were found to have deficiencies, (b) under which flag those ships with deficiencies were flying, (c) how many ships were detained pending the correction of deficiencies and (d) what financial penalties were imposed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of foreign ships inspected under the provisions of the memorandum of understanding on port state control 1982 were as follows:

	Number
1986	2,439
1987	2,250
1988	1,839
1989	1,692
1990	2,118

(a) The numbers of the above found to have deficiencies were:

	Number
1986	1,309
1987	1,228
1988	915
1989	1,003
1990	1,272

(b) Deficiencies were found on ships flying the following flags during 1989 and 1990:

Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Antilles (Netherlands), Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma (Myanmar), Canada, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Faeroes, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, German Federal Republic, Ghana, Greece, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Korean Republic, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, St. Vincent and Grenadier, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Taiwan, Togo, Turkey, USA, USSR, Vanuatu, Vietnam, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

(c) the numbers of foreign ships detained were:

	Number
1986	18
1987	17
1988	37
1989	44
1990	79

(d) Financial penalties cannot readily be measured but usually comprise three main elements: the often considerable loss of revenue arising from delays in sailing, the cost of repairs and the cost of any further inspection to ensure that repairs have been satisfactorily carried out.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate has been made of the impact of the introduction of catalytic converters on total emissions of carbon dioxide from motor vehicles.

Mr. Chope: Catalytic converters, which are essential to meet our future air quality objectives, can lead to an increase in fuel consumption and thus CO_2 emissions. But this effect will be offset by improved engine control systems which will be required to be fitted to new petrol-engined cars from the end of 1992.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to respond to the recommendation of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities that his Department should commission a study of a Berne gauge line from the channel tunnel to the midlands and north-west, to be able to carry a mixture of containers, demountable bodies, and road trailers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Select Committee's report was debated in another place on 4 March. During the debate my noble Friend, Department of the Minister of State, Transport, said that it was clear that the cost of converting a rail route or routes to a continental gauge would be very high and that British Rail's initial strategy of using small-wheeled wagons for the larger continental containers was the right one. He added that the Government might consider whether a gauge conversion study related to the longer-term future would be sensible. So far we have not seen any case for such a study.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to bring forward legislation to provide financial support to British Rail for routes to and from the channel tunnel which are safe, environmentally acceptable and fast.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to amend section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987, which prohibits Government subsidy for international rail services. We are prepared to consider subsidy for any non-user benefits arising from the use by commuter services of a rail link between the channel tunnel and London.

Marchioness Inquiry

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations of the marine accident investigation branch inquiry into the Marchioness disaster, indicating which have been accepted and implemented, which have been accepted and not yet implemented and the date by which he intends that they should be implemented; and which have not been accepted and the reasons for such rejection.

Mr. McLoughlin: All 27 recommendations listed in the marine accident investigation branch report into the collision between the Marchioness and the Bowbelle were accepted on 24 July 1990 by the then Secretary of State. A copy of the recommendations was placed in the Library at that time. Action on 14 of the recommendations (Nos. 1-3, 6-11, 14, 16, 18, 23 and 25) has been completed. Action to implement the remaining recommendations is well advanced and will be completed as quickly as is practicable. Two of these recommendations (Nos. 26 and 27) require the Department to establish and maintain monitoring processes to ensure that the substance of the report's recommendations continues to be borne in mind in future developments; and this has been set in place.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action has been taken to review and, where necessary, to improve the procedures of the communications and emergency services as a result of lessons learnt about the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. McLoughlin: The procedures for communications between ships, the Port of London Authority (PLA) and the emergency services are contained in PLA's combined accident procedure (POLACAP) instructions. Two full-scale POLACAP emergency exercises have been held recently and the lessons learnt have been incorporated in the POLACAP instructions.

The PLA general directions for navigation have been amended to require:

1. Ships to be equipped with a VHF radiotelephone capable of communicating with the harbourmaster.

2. Ships to maintain a continuous watch on the VHF channel appropriate to the part of the Thames in which they are operating.

3. Ships to be fitted with vertical emergency aerials if main aerials are lowered when passing under bridges.

4. Ships of more than 40 metres length to be provided with telephone or portable handset communications between the navigating bridge and the lookout forward.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mobile Abattoirs

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further review the Chief Veterinary Officer has made of the use of mobile abattoirs in remote areas since the answer to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight, Official Report, 17 January 1990, columns 290-91.

Mr. Maclean: Veterinary staff are working closely with the Humane Slaughter Association to assist it in the development of a mobile abattoir. Any such abattoir will be required to meet the proposed single market standards.

Food Imports

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of food imports into the United Kingdom came from (a) EEC countries in 1970 and (b) from the original Six in 1990.

Mr. Curry: In 1970, 13 per cent. of United Kingdom imports of food, feed and drink by value were from the original six members of the European Community; the comparable figure for 1990 was 43 per cent.

Hedges

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances officials of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service charge for advice on the planting and management of hedges.

Mr. Curry: General advice on conservation matters, including advice on hedgerows, is available free of charge from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service. A charge would be made, at a rate agreed between ADAS and an individual client, for detailed advice specific to a site, including survey and evaluation work and the provision of planting and management programmes.

Export Refunds

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the percentage change between 1991 and 1990 in export refunds for foodstuffs containing cereals; what is his policy on the level of export refunds on such foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Export refunds for processed products containing cereals are derived by applying to the basic refunds, set each month by the Cereals Management Committee, co-efficients related to the cereal content of the processed product. The basic refunds for the principal grains and some example products determined for June 1990 and 1991, and the percentage increase for each, are set out in the table. Full details of export refunds on processed products applying in June 1991 are set out in EC regulation 1461/91 (OJ L138 of 1 June 1991) available in the Library of the House.

ecu/tonne	June 1990	June 1991	Per cent. increase 1990-91
Wheat	74·05	102·93	39
Wheat Pellets	75·53	104·99	39
Barley	72·41	90·22	25
Rolled or Flaked Barley	108·62	135·33	25
Maize	97·29	127·47	31
Maize Groats	175·12	229·45	31

Government policy is to seek to ensure that export refunds for processed products containing cereals are set at a level which adequately compensates processors for the cost of their cereals raw materials.

Farm Budget

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of the overall farm budget agreed for 1991-92 with the comparable figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 13 June 1991, Official Report, col. 669-70.

Blue Ear Pig Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 17 June, Official Report, column 21, on blue ear pig disease, if he will list in which counties his veterinarians are, or have been, on detached duty as a result of the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: During the current outbreak of blue eared pig disease, detached duty for veterinary staff in the field has so far been confined to Humberside. During the period of disease control 14 other veterinary field staff have had periods of detached duty in this county.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the counties where pigs from the area restricted as a result of blue ear disease have been sent in the last two months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The counties which have been identified, as a result of the tracing of movements since 1 March, as having received pigs from infected and suspect holdings in the large restricted zone around Humberside are:

Cambridgeshire
Cheshire
Co. Durham
Cumbria
Devon
Essex
Gloucestershire
Lancashire
Leicestershire
Lincolnshire
Norfolk
North Yorkshire
Perth
Somerset
Suffolk
Tyne and Wear
Warwickshire
West Yorkshire
Wiltshire

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 17 June, Official Report, column 21, on blue ear pig disease, if he will list the number of veterinarians on detached duty, and their usual place of work within his Ministry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: There are currently two veterinarians on detached duty in Humberside; one from the Leeds animal health office and one from Carlisle.

Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of feline spongiform encephalopathy have been confirmed in cats to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Feline spongiform encephalopathy is not a notifiable disease, but I am aware of 16 confirmed cases in the United Kingdom.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of canine spongiform encephalopathy have been confirmed in dogs to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No case of a spongiform encephalopathy in a dog has been reported anywhere in the world.

Food Safety

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to make a response to the report entitled Priorities Board: Food Safety on Applied Nutrition Research Consultative Committee of November 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October 1990, Official Report, column 426.

Salmon

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take steps to limit the importation of Norwegian salmon; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will discuss with European Community Agriculture Ministers the effect that unlimited imports of salmon from outside the Community will have upon United Kingdom and other European salmon farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 17 June.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactured Goods

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage share of the United Kingdom market for manufacturing goods was filled by imports from the EEC in 1970; and what was the percentage share in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department does not make regular estimates of import penetration ratios for particular groups of trading partners. Estimates broadly comparable to the published statistics for the percentage share of the United Kingdom market for manufacturing goods filled by imports are as follows:

EC imports as a proportion of home demand (manufacturing):

	percentage
1970	5
1990	20

European Single Market

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many EC directives for the single market have been agreed at meetings of the Council of Ministers that he has attended; how many of these directives have been given legislative effect in the United Kingdom; and how many have been put into legislative effect by all member states.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following the Internal Market Council on 18 June some 202 of the 282 measures in the Commission's single market programme have been adopted, agreed in principle, or had common positions agreed for submission to the European Parliament.

The Commission presented to the 18 June Council its sixth annual progress report concerning the completion of the single market. This reaffirmed the United Kingdom's excellent record on implementation. Of the 126 individual provisions which are required to have entered into force by the end of May the report recorded the United Kingdom as still needing to implement only 20. This was bettered only by Denmark (12 not implemented) and France (18).

Although only 33 directives have been implemented in all member states, the Commission report noted an improvement in the overall level of implementation. This has increased from 69 per cent. in December 1990 to more than 73 per cent. in May 1991.

Bryanston (Report)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 22 May, Official Report, column 477, if he is now in a position to make a statement on what representations he has received seeking the publication of the final report on Bryanston.

Mr. Redwood: From the papers which are now available, I am advised that there is no indication that my right hon. Friend received any representations seeking publication of the inspectors' final report.

Disclosure of Non-audit Fees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the parties who responded to the draft of the statutory instrument relating to the disclosure of non-audit fees and opposed it.

Mr. Redwood: A number of responses were received, some of which expressed opposition to the use at the present time of the Secretary of State's power to require the disclosure of non-audit fees paid to a company's auditors and their associates. It would not be appropriate to disclose the views of identified respondents, since they were not told beforehand that their views would be made public.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 20 May, Official Report, column 333, on what date he intends the statutory instrument relating to disclosure of non-audit fees would come into operation.

Mr. Redwood: No date has yet been decided.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which the auditing firms criticised by his Department's inspectors will be required to file a statement with the regulators stating that they have read and understood the criticisms made of their practices.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which banks in their annual corporate reports will be required to publish the number of times their auditors have acted as receivers for any of the bank's clients.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will indicate the dates on which his representative has attended the meetings of the Auditing Practices Board.

Mr. Redwood: The first meeting of the Auditing Practices Board is due to take place on 3 July.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his representative on the Auditing Standards Board has taken to bring about a reduction in the influence of the six largest auditing firms in setting auditing standards.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has no role in the selection of voting members of the Auditing Practices Board.

Recognised Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether under the Companies Act 1989 the recognised supervisory bodies will enjoy any immunities from prosecution.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Bank Loans

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which banks in their annual corporate report will be required to publish the loans they have advanced to small, medium and large companies.

Mr. Redwood: As we made clear during the public consultation on the forthcoming implementation of the bank accounts directive, the Government support the principle of fuller disclosure aimed at benefiting users of accounts. Where possible, however, we prefer to allow the banking industry to develop its own response to the need for disclosure additional to the directive's requirements.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to ensure that banks rank with all other creditors in bankruptcy and are prevented from imposing conditions which put them in a preferential position.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to propose any such legislation.

Recognised Professional Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what conditions he has laid down as to the number of visits to be made by each regulator to their members in respect of the recognised professional bodies listed in his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 476.

Mr. Redwood: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

European Regional Development Fund

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline the procedure required for lodging an application for European regional development grant.

Mr. Leigh: Applications for European regional development fund (ERDF) grants are made to the secretariat of the monitoring committee of the appropriate ERDF programme. The secretariats for programmes in the north-west are provided by the Department of the Environment's regional offices in Manchester and Liverpool.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the North-West region's share of European regional development grant in each year since the United Kingdom joined the EC.

Mr. Leigh: The north-west's share of European regional development fund grants is shown in the table.

	North West's per cent. share of England's ERDF Commitments	North West's per cent. share of United Kingdom ERDF Commitments

Data Protection

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside, 3 June 1991 Official Report, column 32, (1) if he will arrange for the study being carried out by Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte to be extended to consider electronic raids on medical data;

(2) if he will arrange for the study being carried out by Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte to be extended to consider electronic raids on research data compiled by academic institutions as distinct from businesses.

Mr. Leigh: The focus of the study is on the requirements of business and the police. It would not be practicable for a relatively short-term study of this kind to collect material directly from all sectors. However, it is expected that the findings of the study would be applicable to the needs of most organisations which use information technology, and would therefore be likely to be relevant to those institutions which hold medical and research data in electronic form.

Insolvency Reports

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list his responsibilities in respect of the insolvency service.

Mr. Redwood: The insolvency service is an executive agency within my Department. Its day-to-day management has been delegated under the terms of its framework document to its inspector general and chief executive. He is accountable to and reports to me on its performance. I remain answerable for the policy governing the service's work generally and determine the policy framework within which it operates.

A copy of the agency framework document is available in the House Library.

Synergistic Air-breathing and Rocket Engine

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support his Department is proposing to provide for the research and development of the synergistic air-breathing and rocket engine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: At present my Department has no plans to support the research and development of the synergistic air-breathing and rocket engine. There are many concepts for re-usable space launchers currently under study within Europe. What is clear is that any eventual development of such a vehicle will have to be collaborative, probably on a Europe-wide basis, if it is to be affordable. If, in the context of European collaboration, the European Space Agency were to propose a new optional technology support programme to explore such concepts as the synergistic air-breathing and rocket engine, the Government would be prepared to consider United Kingdom participation in such a programme.

Health Insurance Companies

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from United Kingdom health insurance companies in seeking business opportunities in France, Italy and Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: United Kingdom health insurance companies were among the organisations which responded to my Department's consultative document on the proposed EC third non-life insurance directive published in February this year. They welcome the proposed directive and its liberalising provisions for the marketing of insurance throughout the Community. Our aim is to secure in the directive the maximum possible freedom in the single insurance market.

Buses

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number of buses (a) manufactured in the United Kingdom and (b) imported into the United Kingdom for each year since 1980.

Mr. Leigh: The available figures are as follows:

United Kingdom production and imports of buses

Year	Production number	Imports number
1980	21,572	417
1981	12,444	678
1982	13,107	1,041
1983	15,616	1,616
1984	4,726	1,301
1985	3,885	1,174
1986	2,514	1,493
1987	2,178	1,067
1988	2,511	1,045
1989	2,171	1,056
1990	1,504	665

Notes:
1. Prior to 1984 production figures include mini buses.
2. Imports figures are as defined by SITC(R3) 783.11 and 783.19 (New Buses and Coaches.

Steel

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the rules governing the import and export of steel for British manufacturing companies with subsidiaries in (a) EC countries and (b) non-EC countries with particular reference to the end-user costs.

Mr. Leigh: Steel prices within the European Community are governed by the pricing rules in articles 60 to 64 of the treaty of Paris. These rules are enforced by the European Commission and impose certain constraints on producers' pricing policies. However, producers are still free to compete on price. Hence prices for a given product will vary across the Community and within any individual member state, for example: on the basis of the range of products and services provided; on whether metric or imperial standards are involved; and on whether sales are direct from the mill or through a stockholder.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many enterprise initiative consultants also contract for business arising from firms seeking enterprise initiative grants; and what proportion of the total grant allocation funding to these consultants represents.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 June 1991]: Of the 3,298 consultancy practices listed with DTI contractors in the financial year 1990-91 to carry out work under the enterprise initiative assisted consultancy scheme, 2,239 undertook consultancy projects during that period. Payment of consultancy fees by the DTI represents either one half or two thirds of an individual project's cost, depending upon the location of the client business.

Shipbuilding

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the legislative basis for the Government's decision to privatise British Shipbuilders; and what parliamentary approval was either required or given before the privatisation took place.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 June 1991]: The legislative authority for the privatisation of British Shipbuilders' subsidiaries is the British Shipbuilders Act 1983. No further parliamentary approval was required for these privatisations, but Parliament was informed on each occasion.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Government's reasons for closing the North East Shipbuilders Ltd yards in Sunderland as opposed to any other United Kingdom yards at the time of the 1988 agreement with the European Commission to reduce Britain's merchant shipbuilding capacity.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 June 1991]: The decision to close the remaining NESL shipyards in Sunderland was taken by the Government in December 1988 because no acceptable bids had been received for them. In contrast, sale negotiations for British Shipbuilders' other remaining shipbuilding subsidiaries had by that time reached an advanced stage.

The package notification made in December 1988 to the European Commission of the proposed closure aid at NESL, the proposed terms of sale of the other British Shipbuilders' subsidiaries and forecast British Shipbuilders' results for 1988 and 1989 was to seek the Commission's approval of the overall level of subsidy to British Shipbuilders as conforming to the relevant Community shipbuilding aid ceilings, rather than a specific agreement to reduce United Kingdom merchant shipbuilding capacity.

Exports

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the average annual growth in the volume of exports for the United Kingdom and other EC countries over the period 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 20 June 1991]: The information is in the table. There are no data for Luxembourg or Portugal.

Annual average growth rates of the volume of total exports of goods 1979-90

	Per cent.
Belgium[1]	3·9
Denmark	4·8

Notes:
(1) The average annual growth rate is the rate which, when compounded over the 11 calendar years from 1979 to 1990, gives rise to the observed change in export volumes.
(2) 'Total exports' include goods (including oil and erratics) but not services.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will be able to give 1989-90 figures and 1990-91 figures on energy consumption and energy spending to update the 1988-89 figures given in the answers of 14 May 1990, Official Report, columns 277-78, and 30 April 1990, Official Report, column 387.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 June 1991]: Some estimates have been prepared for 1989-90:

	Million	£ million
Electricity	10·4 Kilowatt hours	3·3
Gas	2·6 Therms	0·8
Oil	3·6 litres	0·4

However, it should be noted that these figures and previous figures given have been compiled from global billing of the Property Services Agency. This billing was not broken down in a way which readily identified the consumption of individual Departments. The figures are therefore only broad indicators and are not comprehensive.

From 1990-91 the Department will have figures based on direct billing which will be accurate and comprehensive. The 1990-91 figures will be available in October 1991.

Public Houses

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many public houses and inns there were in England in 1981 and the last year for which figures are available; and if he expects the number to change significantly during the next two years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 June 1991]: The precise figures are not readily available. The number of full on-licensed premises—about 70 per cent. of which are public houses—in the United Kingdom in 1980 was 76,403. By 1989 there were 83,000 full on-licensed premises in the United Kingdom. I cannot predict whether this figure will change significantly in the next two years. I would not, however, expect it to reduce significantly as a result of the Beer Orders introduced following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report. These require brewers to free from ties half the pubs they own in excess of 2,000; however pubs which are closed do not count towards the number to be freed.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the brewing industry and the licensees of public houses with regard to the future of their trade.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 June 1991:] In recent months the Secretary of State and I have had meetings with the Major brewers. I met the National Licensed Victuallers' Association in January this year and the Secretary of State has also recently offered to meet the NLVA. In addition officials are in regular contact with a wide range of representatives of the brewing industry.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Use

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the results of the survey on energy use, undertaken as part of the English house condition survey in 1986-87, will be published.

Mr. Heseltine: The results will be published this summer.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all consultancy contracts awarded in the past five years without competitive tender.

Mr. Heseltine: I have arranged for a list of the contracts awarded to management or computing consultants in the past five years without competitive tender to be placed in the Library.

Inner City Programme

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify the full range of grants currently available under his inner city programme with a brief technical description of each.

Mr. Portillo: Very important support is provided for the inner cities through the main programmes of the Home Office and the Departments of Trade and Industry, Employment, Education and Science, Transport, Health and Social Security and through support to local authorities and the Housing Corporation by this Department including the estate action programme.

My Department promotes inner city regeneration through a variety of programmes and initiatives, including the following grant measures.

City Challenge

City Challenge is a new initiative under which local authorities are invited to draw up comprehensive plans in partnership with the private sector, voluntary organisations and local people, to bid for resources for the regeneration of key parts of their areas within a five-year period. Fifteen authorities have been invited to compete for a share in over £250 million from DoE programmes during the five years 1992-93 to 1996-97.

Urban Development Corporations

Grant-aid is provided for the ten urban development corporations in England. Some £470 million will be available in 1991-92 to purchase and reclaim land, provide infrastructure, encourage development and improve the environment.

Urban Programme

Fifty-seven urban programme (UP) authorities in England receive 75 per cent. grant towards a wide range of projects with an emphasis on economic and environmental improvements as the key to self-sustaining regeneration in targeted inner city areas. In 1991-92, £268 million is available to support almost 9,000 projects.

City Grant

City grant is provided to support private sector capital projects which benefit run down urban areas and which cannot proceed without grant. Over £56 million has been committed to the city grant programme for 1991-92 and will be available for industrial, commercial, housing and leisure projects.

Derelict Land Grant

Derelict land grant (DLG) is available throughout England to local authorities, other public bodies, voluntary organisations, private firms and individuals to promote the reclamation of land which has been so damaged by industrial or other development that it is incapable of beneficial use without treatment. The DLG programme for 1991-92 totals £88 million of which about £81·5 million is expected to be spent on local authority reclamation schemes. About 40 per cent. of the programme will be devoted to schemes in the inner cities.

City Action Teams

There are eight city action teams (CATs) operating in Birmingham, Cleveland, Leeds/Bradford, Liverpool, London, Tyne and Wear, Nottingham/Leicester/Derby and Manchester/Salford. The CATs are an important mechanism for co-ordinating and targeting Government programmes and harnessing the support of business and industry. Each CAT has a small budget, a total of £8·1 million in 1991-92, with which to prime action targeted on inner city problems of unemployment, environmental improvement and the need to promote enterprise.

London City Airport

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the public inquiry into the planning application submitted on 12 September 1989 for the extension of the runway and the operation of jet aircraft at London city airport; and when he expects to complete his consideration of the report.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment arising from the planning application dated 12 September 1989 by John Mowlem and Co. plc. to extend the runway at London city airport (a) if he has now received the report of the inspector who conducted the public inquiry and (b) when he expects to be able to announce his decision.

Mr. Yeo: The inspector delivered on 14 June his report of the public inquiry into two applications relating to the London City airport. One application to vary the conditions of a permission granted on 23 May 1985 was submitted on 12 September 1989. The second application to carry out development of the runway was submitted on 15 December 1989. My consideration of the report will be completed when I have taken careful account of all relevant matters.

Refugees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to provide a per capita per refugee revenue support grant for receiving local authorities.

Mr. Key: There are currently no such plans.

Waveney District Council

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to report his Department's findings into the way Waveney district council assigned its buildings cleaning work contract to its own direct services organisation in March this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I am currently considering the response of Waveney district council to my Department's inquiries about its building cleaning work contract. A decision on whether the Secretary of State should use his powers of sanction under part I of the Local Government Act 1988 will be taken shortly. I shall write to my hon. Friend again at that time.

3Ds Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the application by 3Ds Ltd. for £5 million city grant has been considered; whether all the information required has been provided; whether the identify of all shareholders in 3Ds Ltd. has been ascertained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The first phase of 3Ds proposed development is still under discussion and further information is still awaited before a full appraisal of the project can be undertaken. The identity of the shareholders in 3D Ltd. has been ascertained.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce an advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest in England.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Housing Improvement Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of hardship caused to applicants for housing improvement grants under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 by virtue of (i) the allowance of the notional housing premium for applicants with substantial housing costs being beyond what they can afford and (ii) the lack of an unearned income disregard affecting applicants with small occupational pensions.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 21 June 1990]: We have received a number of representations from grant applicants and others on these matters and will be considering them as part of our review of the new grant system later this year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents (Benefits)

5. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current level of spending on benefits for lone parents.

Mr. Newton: In 1990-91 expenditure on income-related benefits for lone parent families was approximately £3·4 billion.

National Insurance

15. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the weekly additional cost to a married man with a non-working wife and three children earning £26,000 a year of the abolition of the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Scott: If the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions were removed, a married man earning £26,000 a year would have to pay about £10 a week extra in contributions.

20. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the impact on a person earning £35,000 per annum, of the removal of the national insurance contributions upper earnings limit.

Mr. Scott: If the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions were removed, a person earning £35,000 a year would pay an extra £1,324·80 a year in contributions; that is over £25 a week.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received about the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Scott: It remains the Government's intention to retain the national insurance upper earnings limit and we have received no recent representations about it.

Child Benefit

16. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the impact on a typical family with two children of the last two increases in child benefit.

Mr. Jack: This year's increases mean that such a family will see their weekly tax-free income from child benefit rise by over 15 per cent. from £14·50 to £16·75.

Child Support Agency

17. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new jobs are likely to be created as a result of the establishment of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Jack: We anticipate that the proposed Child Support Agency, which becomes operational from April 1993, is likely to create around 2,200 new jobs across the country.

The majority of these jobs will be located in Belfast, Birkenhead, Dudley, Falkirk, Hastings and Plymouth. Each of the designated locations for these offices will provide around 500 administrative jobs. It is hoped that the majority of these job opportunities can be filled locally.

19. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if any estimate has been made of the potential reduction in spending on benefits for lone parents as a result of maintenance orders following the establishment of the Child Support Agency.

25. Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any estimate has been made of the possible reduction in spending on benefits for lone parents as a result of improved assessment and enforcement of maintenance orders following the establishment of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Jack: We expect spending on benefits to be about £400 million a year lower as a consequence of the full establishment of the Child Support Agency.

Family Credit

18. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current length of time which elapses between receipt of application for family credit and a decision being reached in cases affecting (a) employed and (b) self-employed applicants.

Mr. Jack: In May 1991, the average clearance time for family credit claims was 17·7 days for employed cases and 31·5 days for self-employed cases.

Pensioner Premium

21. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are estimated to have benefited from increases in the pensioner premium in income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Since October 1989 nearly 1·5 million pensioner claimants have gained directly from increases in income support premiums. And this takes no account of the millions who have benefited because improvements in income support levels have increased their entitlement to housing benefit and community charge benefit. We have added some £300 million to pensioner premiums over and above normal upratings in less than two years.

Healthy Diets

22. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the measures his Department has taken to ensure that families on social security can pay for a healthy diet.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government do not prescribe what proportion of benefit should be spent on any particular budgetary item, but the social security reforms have made it possible to channel extra help to the most vulnerable groups. Compared with the pre-1988 position, the resources made available to families with children through income related benefits have risen by around £½ billion a year in real terms.

Personal Pensions

23. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total value of the reduction in pension contributions to a man on average earnings with a personal pension if the 2 per cent. special incentive were withdrawn.

Miss Widdecombe: Based on average full-time male earnings of about £16,000 per year, the total amount of national insurance contributions payable in the year 1991-92 would be £3,745. The total amount payable from the national insurance fund to an appropriate personal pension scheme would be £1,037. Withdrawing the 2 per cent. incentive would reduce this by approximately £266.

26. Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received a number of representations about various aspects of personal pensions.

Local Offices

24. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent in London social security offices during the past 12 months on facilities for clients.

Miss Widdecombe: In the financial year 1990-91 £3·5 million was spent on capital refurbishment projects at 30 offices in the London area. Of this amount £1·8 million can be clearly identified as specifically for client facilities. The balance of £1·7 million was on schemes involving both client and staff areas.

Liable Relatives Officers

27. Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the work of his Department's liable relatives officers.

Mr. Jack: Liable relative officers work within the current maintenance system to obtain maintenance for people claiming income support so that people are not unnecessarily dependent on income support because someone who can afford to pay maintenance fails to do so. We have carried out a wide-ranging review of the whole system of maintenance for children, and the Child Support Bill now before Parliament contains proposals for a new child maintenance system. Under the new system, assessment of maintenance for children will be by a standard formula. In addition, there will be a Child Support Agency dedicated to the assessment, collection and enforcement of child maintenance. The agency's services will be available to all parents bringing up children where maintenance is an issue.

Young People

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has received a copy of the recent report published by the Coalition on Young People on Social Security.

Mr. Scott: I have received a copy of the report by the Coalition on Young People and Social Security. I do not consider that the restoration of general entitlement to benefit for 16 and 17-year-olds recommended by the report is the right solution. However I shall be looking at the report's findings carefully, together with the Department's own research, to ensure that the most vulnerable young people receive the best possible service.

Performance Indicators

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance indicators are published for his Department.

Mr. Jack: A wide range of performance indicators are published in the DSS departmental report (cm 1514) most notably in tables 40, 41 and 42.

In addition each of the Department's agencies include performance targets, covering their most important activities, in their business plans. Targets are typically set for service delivery and for a range of financial indicators. Copies of the departmental report and the business plans are in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sittings

35. Mr. Favell: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many representations on hon. Members' hours have been received from hon. Members' spouses.

Mr. MacGregor: One.

EC Proposals

40. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the parliamentary procedures for debate and scrutiny of EC proposals.

Mr. MacGregor: The changes leading to the present scrutiny procedures were debated on 28 June 1990, 24 October 1990 and 22 January 1991. The Government are committed to carrying out a full review of the procedures at the end of this parliamentary Session.

In addition, I keep the arrangements constantly under review and I have recently tabled a proposal to deal with one technical point that has arisen from the operation of the European Standing Committees.

Regional Sittings

Mr. Hind: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals to permit the House of Commons to meet in Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds and Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

Ibbs Report

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the several outbuildings to the precincts of the Palace of Westminster showing who is in charge of each building and what changes in these arrangements will follow from the Ibbs report.

Mr. MacGregor: The following House of Commons outbuildings form part of the parliamentary estate:

Number 1 Canon Row
Norman Shaw (North) and (South)
St. Stephen's House
Number 1 Parliament street
Number 1 Derby Gate
Number 3 Dean's Yard
Number 6-7 Old Palace Yard
Number 2 the Abbey Garden

In addition, Palace Chambers and Nos. 1 and 2 Bridge street are either vacant or occupied temporarily pending redevelopment as part of phase II of the new parliamentary building project.

No. 1 The Abbey gardens is occupied by the House of Lords.

Accommodation in these buildings is managed by the respective House authorities with works services being undertaken by the DOE Property Holdings, parliamentary works organisation. Implementation of the Ibbs report will transfer responsibility for the latter to the Houses.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to maximise energy conservation and efficiency in the House during the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: Energy conservation work is treated both as a specific task and as integral part of both the maintenance of the fabric of the buildings and services on the parliamentary estate and the design of new facilities. During the year the coverage of the building energy management system will be extended, further energy efficient lighting will be installed, another major step in the modernisation of the heating system will be completed and other minor work will be carried out as the opportunity arises.

Staff of the parliamentary works office have a continuing brief to draw the attention of energy liaison officers where lighting is left on repeatedly, and security staff are asked to switch off lighting in empty rooms. It is, of course, incumbent upon all occupants of the parliamentary buildings to adopt a commonsense approach to the use of lighting and other energy consuming equipment.

Library

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the books offered by a Member of the House in the last month for inclusion in the Library.

Mr. MacGregor: Members who are authors often present a signed copy of their book to the Library for its special collection. From time to time Members also offer books to the Library written by authors other than themselves. It is not, however, Library practice to reveal the names of Members who present books in this way without the agreement, in each case, of the Member concerned.

Millbank

Mr. Michael: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress he has been able to achieve on improving safety for hon. and right hon. Members crossing Millbank to and from their offices.

Mr. MacGregor: I have little to add to the information I gave the hon. Member on 11 February last. Both Houses and Westminster city council have agreed to the installation of an additional island refuge outside the entrance to the Lords' car park. They are all agreed, however, that it would be impracticable to install an extra pedestrian crossing between those at the south-east corner of Parliament square and at Great College street.

DEFENCE

Civil Aircraft Notification Procedure

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures exist for the reporting and recording of breaches by military aircraft of areas notified under the civil notification procedure, other than those incidents in which an air miss was reported.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Complaints made to my Department relating to civil aircraft notification procedures, other than air miss reports, would be handled in the same way as other complaints about military low flying.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of notifications made under the civil aircraft notification procedure in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Records are not available for notifications made under the civil aircraft notification procedure before August 1983. The number of notifications since then is as follows:

Year	Number
1983	[1]775
1984	5,976
1985	7,183
1986	4,598
1987	4,604
1988	3,213
1989	548
1990	412
1991	[2]51

Notes:
[1] Figure is for August to December inclusive.
[2] Figure is for January to May inclusive.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of all air misses since 1979 in which a military aircraft breached an area notified under the civil aircraft notification procedure.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following is the information requested:

Date	Location	Aircraft involved
5 March 1980	15 NM[1] E of York	Starfighter/Schweizer AG-Cat
29 September 1980	7 NM S of Pitlochry	Buccaneer/Lama SA315B
22 September 1981	21 NM N of Dundee	Buccaneer/Lama SA315B
15 April 1982	5.5 NM NE of Leconfield	Lightning/Schweizer AG-Cat

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of booked low-flying movements at less than 250 ft over the United Kingdom in each year since 1979, broken down by aircraft type.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to my Department's evidence to the recent inquiry by the Select Committee on Defence (HC 120/90, page 141) and to the written answers to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 19 December 1990 at column 208 and to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 8 March 1991 at column 332.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the flow control regulations in the United Kingdom low-flying system apply to traffic at all altitudes within the system.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes, except for some helicopter operations and above certain flowed valleys.

The Gulf

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects that the official board of inquiry into the incident in which British soldiers in Iraq were killed by friendly fire will be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) on 19 June at column 226.

Grenadier Guardsmen (Accident)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many documents requested by the solicitor acting for Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray have been (a) withheld and (b) withheld in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None of the documents which the solicitors have requested has been withheld. Their outstanding request for the 1984, 1985 and 1989 editions of the Batus range standing orders will be met if they are still available.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many special socks have been provided to Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray; and if he will make it his policy to supply such special socks free on demand.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health will reply shortly.

Charter Technologies (Liquidation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has had from Muras, Baker, Jones and Co., liquidators of Charter Technologies.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Submarines

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the operation of the scheme under which the Royal Navy notifies details of planned activity by submerged submarines in the inner Clyde.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Clyde submarine movements notification scheme was introduced on 17 December 1990. Under this scheme the Royal Navy gives notice of the sea areas and times of planned submerged submarine activity in the inner Clyde. The information is broadcast by the Clyde coastguard every four hours on VHF and is also available by telephone from the operations room at the Clyde submarine base. Local fishermen have also undertaken to inform the Navy in advance of those times and locations when fishing activity is expected to be heavier than usual. The scheme does not preclude fishing in notified areas, but alerts fishermen to those areas where dived submarine activity may occur. The operation of the scheme has been monitored closely since its introduction and I believe it is working well and has achieved a worth while improvement in fishing vessel and submarine safety in the areas covered. In the light of this, I have agreed that from 1 July the scheme will be expanded to cover all Clyde submarine exercise areas lying either wholly or partly within the United Kingdom 12-mile limit. The ranges at Rona and Raasay are also to be included in the notification arrangements.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the environmental assessment report on the proposed high-speed rail link; and if he will then publish it.

Mr. Freeman: The environmental assessment which British Rail has been carrying out of the safeguarded section between Cheriton and Upper Halling may need revision, depending on the choice of a preferred route for the whole rail link. However, before embarking on the formal approval process for the rail link, British Rail intends to prepare and publish a full environmental statement for the complete route between the channel tunnel and London.

Motorways (Litter)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has paid Warwickshire county council as its agent for clearing litter from the M6 in Warwickshire each year for the last five years.

Mr. Chope: Separate figures for litter clearance on the M6 in Warwickshire are not available. The amounts paid by the Department to Warwickshire county council for sweeping and cleansing, including litter clearance, on those stretches of the M6 in Warwickshire and the west midlands for which it is the Department's agents were:

1986-87	28,665
1987-88	30,004
1988-89	[1]142,480
1989-90	97,194
1990-91	[2]42,906

[1] Including £70,000 additional litter scavenges.
[2] Latest available figure.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has for ensuring value for money in payments made to his agents for clearing litter from motorways.

Mr. Chope: Agent authorities are required to expose litter clearing on motorways to competitive tendering in the same manner as their own highway work. Private sector agents let all this work by competiton.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who is responsible for monitoring the application of the code of practice on litter under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to motorways.

Mr. Chope: The application of the code to motorways is being monitored both by the Department of Transport and by its agents.

Air Passenger Breathing Equipment

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Eurocae standard on passenger protective breathing equipment has now been published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Eurocae minimum operational performance specification for passenger protective breathing equipment (PPBE), document Eurocae ED-65, was approved for publication by the Eurocae Council on 30 April 1991. I understand that publication is expected by mid-July 1991.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority on its policy on the use of smoke hoods by its staff when travelling by air.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am advised that the Civil Aviation Authority does not issue smoke hoods to its staff and has no policy concerning the use of smoke hoods by its staff when travelling by air. It is open to all individuals, including CAA staff, to buy a smoke hood for themselves if they so choose; but I understand that the smoke hoods currently on the market do not meet the CAA's specification for aircraft smoke hoods, being primarily designed for escape from fires in buildings.

Planning Decisions, East London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce decisions on the extension of the runway at London City airport and the east London river crossing.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport expect to receive the inspector's report into the east London river crossing when he has completed it and to make decisions after they have considered it carefully. As regards London city airport, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) yesterday at col. 393.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding London city airport planning application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received a number of representations pressing for a speedy decision on the London city airport planning application.

This decision is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment; I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson).

Crash Cushions

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he anticipates the production of a British or equivalent European performance specification for roadside crash cushions, following the recent submission of a draft specification to the CEN 226 committee.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Monday 24 June 1991]: Harmonised European standards covering terminology, performance specification and impact testing procedures for vehicle safety restraint systems, including crash cushions, are now being prepared by working group 1 of CEN technical committee No. 226 ("Road Equipment").

The current target date for the draft standards is December 1991 with the publication stage in late 1993.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was discussed, and what agreements were reached, with other European Community ministers during his talks on 13 June with the ad hoc group on immigration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to a question from my hon. Friend the member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 20 June 1991 at columns 242-43.

Mr. Gordon Warren

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on when the review of the case of Mr. Gordon Warren will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the review has been completed and the matter is now under consideration by the commissioner.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase fines on airlines carrying asylum seekers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The level of the charge payable under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 in respect of inadequately documented passengers is under review.

Prisoners

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions prison inmates have been offered ex gratia payments if they would cease making allegations of improper treatment in prison and would undertake not to seek further publicity.

Mrs. Rumbold: Payments are sometimes made, on legal advice in the normal course of litigation, in settlement of claims by prison inmates. In a few cases, the agreement to settle has been subject to an undertaking that the prisoner would not take any further legal proceedings on the claim or seek publicity about the terms of the settlement. Records are not kept of the number of cases in which "no publicity clauses" have been used, but they are believed to be rare, and their use is being reviewed.

Mr. Karamjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will cancel the deportation notice issued against Mr. Karamjit Singh Chahal, allow him to remain in the United Kingdom with his wife and family, and release him from prison immediately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The three advisers have now tendered their advice on Mr. Chahal's case. My right hon. Friend will give full and careful consideration to their recommendation and to all representations received on Mr. Chahal's behalf before deciding whether to make a deportation order. If it is decided to make a deportation order, Mr. Chahal will have a right of appeal against destination to the independent appellate authorities.

Castington Youth Custody Centre

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed staff, other than night patrols and auxiliary officers, were in post at Castington youth custody centre when it commenced Fresh Start working in August 1987; and how many are currently in post.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of prison officers, including principal and senior officers and specialists, in post at Her Majesty's young offender institution Castington was 118 when it commenced "fresh start" working in August 1987. There are currently 136 officers in post.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional staff were due to be provided to Castington youth custody centre by April 1991 and April 1992, respectively; and what steps are being taken to meet their staffing requirements.

Mrs. Rumbold: The target for the number of prison officers, including principal and senior officers and specialists, to be in post at Her Majesty's young offender institution Castington by 31 March 1991 was 136, an increase of three on the number of officers who were in post on 1 April 1990. This target was achieved. The current target staffing figure is 137 and during 1991-92 the area manager will be keeping this figure under review taking into account factors such as the work load of the establishment and the scope for achieving improvements in efficiency.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people are now imprisoned in Cardiff and Swansea prisons because no other appropriate accommodation is available to them; and how many young people are in prisons elsewhere in England and Wales for the same reason.

Mrs. Rumbold: On Friday 21 June, there were 61 males under the age of 21 at Swansea prison and 87 at Cardiff prison in remand centres which are separate from adult accommodation. Due to industrial action by prison officers at Cardiff, a further 45 young men were held in police cells in Gwent, South Wales and Avon and Somerset forces.

On the same date, throughout England and Wales a total of 3,245 young men under the age of 21 who were remanded for further appearances or sentence by the courts were held in prison service establishments, of whom 1,188 were in local prisons.

Young female prisoners are not held in separate establishments and on 21 June there were a total of 108 young women in custody in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Information on young persons in prison custody in other parts of the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Prison Service

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the latest available figures for the total numbers of people employed in the prison service broken down by (a) occupation and grade, (b) gender and (c) ethnic background;

(2) what has been the percentage increase of (a) women and (b) ethnic minorities employed in the prison service between 1978 and the latest available figures broken down by occupation and grade.

Note: Figures including staff in the Directorate of Works and the Supply and Transport Branch, both of which perform some functions for other parts of the Home Office.

A total of 16·6 per cent. of prison service staff are women. The proportion of female prison officers is 8·8 per cent., compared with 3·5 per cent. in 1978.

Comparably detailed figures are not available in relation to ethnic background, because of an incomplete response by staff to voluntary monitoring, but it is estimated that fewer than 1 per cent. of the prison service unified grades are from the ethnic minorities. Efforts are being made to improve the response rate and to increase the number of members of the ethnic minorities recruited to the service.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to extend his policies to help homeless people in London and the South East to the rest of the country; and if he has any plans to make available grants to match money raised by local voluntary organisations to establish hotels for the homeless; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department is pursuing two initiatives to help homeless people in the particularly hard-pressed areas of London and the south-east: £96 million has been provided over three years to provide permanent and hostel accommodation and support for rough sleepers in central London; £300 million is available over two years to provide permanent housing for homeless families in London and the south-east. These special initiatives are additional to the Housing Corporations's special needs programme, which funds the provision of 3,000 places a year for homeless and other special needs. Under its hostels initiative the corporation has funded the provision of over 25,000 hostel places in the past 10 years. This year we have again doubled the amount available to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness to over £4·5 million.

Caledonian Forest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given in the negotiations on the European Environment directive to the designation of areas of the ancient Caledonian forest as world heritage sites.

Mr. Yeo: Although the Secretary of State for the Environment takes the lead in matters concerning the world heritage convention, it is for the Secretary of State for Scotland to decide which Scottish sites should be nominated for inclusion on the world heritage list. The draft EC directive on flora and fauna habitats lists in annex 1 the Caledonian forests as a type of habitat of Community interest.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there have been any shipments of hazardous waste to England for disposal that have not been reported under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has no information on this. Responsibility for enforcing the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations lies with disposal authorities. There is no requirement that they report any breaches of the regulations to my Department.

Households

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the change in the numbers and proportions of households in shared occupation since 1981 in Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham.

Mr. Yeo: Up-to-date information on households in shared occupation in these areas will not be available until figures from the 1991 census of population are published next year.

Lone Parents

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the increase in the numbers of children in lone-parent households since 1981 in Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham.

Mr. Yeo: Up-to-date information on the number of children in lone-parent households in these areas will not be available until results from the 1991 census of population are published next year. However, the Department's estimate of the numbers of lone-parent households, which are based on mid-year population estimates by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, are given in the following table.

Lone-parent households

	Mid 1981 thousands	Mid 1989 thousands	Increase thousands	Increase Per cent.
Greenwich	8·3	10·6	2·3	28
Wandsworth	12·0	15·1	3·1	26
Lewisham	10·6	13·0	2·4	23

East London Planning Decisions

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the reports of the inspectors considering the proposed extension of the runway at London City airport and the proposed east London river crossing; and when he expects to make decisions on these matters.

Mr. Yeo: As regards London city airport, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on Monday 24 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson), Official Report, column 393.

As regards the east London river crossing, I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport expect to receive the inspector's report when he has completed it, and to make decisions on it after we have considered all the relevant matters carefully.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now ready to publish a timetable for legislation on waste disposal on land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have today placed in the Library copies of our target timetable for implementation of legislation on waste disposal on land. This covers part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and now substantially completes our implementation plans for the Act as well as for the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989. It should allow the local authorities sufficient time to make the necessary arrangements; I shall consult the local authority associations as to whether there are any detailed problems.

This legislation brings a complete overhaul of the regulation of waste management. It provides opportunities and responsibilities for all those concerned with waste management to contribute to a better environment for tomorrow.

As I told the Select Committee on the Environment on 17 May, we are considering whether HMIP might be given responsibility for waste regulation as suggested in paragraph 18.17 of the Environment White Paper. Whatever the outcome, we need to make progress on the framework of the new regulatory system.

The proposed timetable for implementing the new regulatory system is as follows:

Waste Disposal Legislation Implementation Timetable

Target Date	Task
Summer 1991	Lay regulations and issue circular on the registration of waste carriers and seizure of vehicles. Waste regulatory authority powers to seize vehicles used for fly tipping come into effect. Consult on draft regulations to implement a duty of care of waste producers and holders.
November 1991	Issue circular and code of practice giving guidance on compliance with the duty of care. Lay regulations implementing duty of care.
April 1992	Duty of care regulations and provisions on the registered carrying of waste come into effect.
Early summer 1992	Consult of regulations and statutory guidance for the licensing of waste disposal.
Summer 1992	Consult on a scheme of charges for licensing.
December 1992	Lay regulations, announce charging scheme and statutory guidance, issue circular on licensing.
April 1993	Licensing regulations and charging scheme come into effect.

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a further statement on the compensation he is giving to local authorities who release service personnel serving in the Gulf from their poll tax registration;

(2) if he will make a statement on refunds from the Ministry of Defence to his Department in relation to service men returning from the Gulf.

Mr. Key [holding answer 24 June 1991]: This Department issued further advice to local authorities on the community charge treatment of people serving in the Gulf and the reimbursement scheme on 16 May. A copy of this advice has been placed in the Library of the House.

WALES

Travellers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the proposed itinerants' camp at the Gresford-Pulford bypass to meet residents to discuss plans to establish an itinerants' camp; and what representations he has received on this matter.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The proposal has been referred to my right hon. Friend for determination. It would not therefore be appropriate for him to visit the site or meet the local residents. They will however have the opportunity at the inspector's discretion, to express their views at the public local inquiry to be held on 16 July.

My right hon. Friend has received 27 representations, one of which included a petition of 770 signatures and 22 letters, all opposed to the proposals.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers in full time employment with seven years experience are earning (a) £10,000 to £12,000, (b) £12,000 to £14,000, (c) £14,000 to £16,000, (d) £16,000 to £18,000, (e) £18,000 to £20,000, (f) £20,000 to £22,000, (g) £22,000 to £24,000 and (h) £24,000 to £26,000 per annum, or the nearest convenient salary breakpoints.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of teachers in full-time employment in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Wales with seven years' experience as at 31 March 1988 is given in the following table. Information for more recent years is not yet available.

£ per annum	Number[1]
10,000-12,000	400
12,000-14,000	141
14,000-16,000	89
Over 16,000	13
TOTAL	643

[1] Includes teachers with completed service of seven but less than eight years at 31 March 1988.

Travellers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many existing sites there are; and in what locations there are itinerant camps in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested, which has been provided by local planning authorities in Wales, is given in the following tables:

Education (Special Needs)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the last 10 years, and for each local education authority area in Wales, the number of statements of special educational need issued, separately distinguishing between primary and secondary schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of children for whom statements of special educational need were made for the first time are given in the following table. Information on the number of new statements issued is not available by sector nor for years prior to 1986.

	Calendar year

West Glamorgan	274	234	304	307	358

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the most recently available date and for each local education authority, the number of applications for statements of special educational need that are still pending; and if he will identify the mean, median and mode of waiting times for those applications.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Welsh Language

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent by each local education authority in Wales in each year since 1989 on teacher training courses for Welsh in the national curriculum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The total amount which local education authorities spend on training for Welsh language teaching is not collected centrally. However, we have approved the following levels of expenditure for specific grants in support of local education authority training of teachers in Welsh.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified teachers of Welsh at (i) primary and (ii) secondary level there were in (a) 1988 and (b) the latest date available; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of qualified Welsh teachers at primary and secondary schools is available from a range of tables presented in the 1987 primary school staffing survey and the 1989 secondary school staffing survey, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

(i) Primary level

Information about teachers who teach Welsh as a subject is not held centrally but the number of primary school teachers with a qualification in Welsh is as follows:

Subject of qualification[1]	Number of teachers
Welsh	2,300
Teaching Welsh as a second language	400

[1] Main/subsidiary/related subject qualification.

(ii) Secondary level

In secondary schools the qualifications of teachers who teach Welsh as a subject are as follows:

Subject	Main/ subsidiary subject[1] per cent.	No qualification per cent.	Number of teachers
Welsh as a first language	83·1	16·9	300
Welsh as a second language	69·9	30·1	600

[1] Main/subsidiary/related subject qualification.

In order to increase the supply of teachers of the language in secondary schools, Welsh has been added to the list of shortage subjects for which a bursary of £1,500 is paid to students on initial teacher training courses. As part of the monitoring of the national curriculum, schools will be supplying the Department with information about the number of qualified teachers capable of teaching Welsh in the classroom. The Department is also shortly to consult with interested groups on a limited survey of staff in primary schools in 1992.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Alex Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will carry out an epidemiological survey into the incidence of myalgic encephalomyelitis in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. Myalgic encephalomyelitis is not a clearly defined disease. Diagnosis rests upon identification of a cluster of symptoms for which there is no diagnostic test. The views of doctors vary widely about diagnosis and treatment, there could be no agreed case definition, and it would thus not be practicable to collect data for an epidemiological study.

Radioactivity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the time it will take before the radioactive products from the 1986 nuclear accident at Chernobyl will be reduced to a level to permit normal hill farming to resume.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is not possible to estimate how long radioactivity from the Chernobyl nuclear accident will require those hill farms within the restricted area in Wales to remain subject to controls on the sale and movement of their sheep. Our "mark and release" arrangements and associated compensation payments are designed to ensure minimum disruption to normal farming practices.

Following an intensive monitoring programme my right hon. Friend was able to announce in January this year the lifting of controls from an area near Harlech in Gwynedd. We are continuing with our monitoring and assessment programmes in the remaining restricted area with a view to lifting controls as soon as it is possible to do so without comprising food safety.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate for 1991-92 (a) the level of median weekly earnings for all full-time adult employees and (b) median hourly earnings for part-time employees.

Mr. Jackson: The results of the NES 1991 survey will begin to be published on 26 September 1991 and publication will be complete by the end of this year. The estimates called for in the question are, therefore, not yet available.

Company Debts

Mr. Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to require all registered companies in Britain to meet their debts within six weeks of those debts being invoiced.

Mr. Forth: No. The existing legal framework already provides avenues to pursue commercial debt. Rather than add to the burden of legislation, much can be achieved to speed up payments by the education of both suppliers and providers. To this end, the Government will be launching, later this year, a revision of the booklet for suppliers, "Prompt Payment Please", and a new booklet aimed at larger purchasing organisations.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Tropical Timber Organisation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that the United Kingdom Government only approves activities of the International Tropical Timber Organisation which incorporate strict environmental safeguards.

Mrs. Chalker: Following the International Tropical Timber Organisation's bi-annual meeting in Quito—28 May to 7 June 1991—independent consultants will be appointed to draft a manual on project preparation for the International Tropical Timber Organisation. The consultant's terms of reference will include making proposals to take full account of environmental impacts of projects. The British Government called for and fully support these and other reforms in the International Tropical Timber Organisation's project cycle.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the capital disregard for housing benefit would be if it had been uprated in real terms since 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: Based on a rise in the retail prices index of 25·8 per cent. between April 1988 and April 1991, the level at or below which capital is disregarded would now be £3,774.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of restoring to its real term 1988 value the £3,000 capital disregard for housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates suggest that the cost in 1991-92 would be around £20 million.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986, 1987 and 1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of changing the rules on tariff income on capital disregards for housing benefit to assume £1 of income from every £500 above the lower limit; and if he has any plans to do so.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates suggest that the cost in 1991-92 would be around £60 million. We have no plans to change the rules in housing benefit or any of the other income-related benefits.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986, 1987 and 1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the dates and areas in the United Kingdom in which the temperature averaged 0 deg C. or below for a period of seven days between 1 November 1990 and 30 April 1991.

Mr. Scott: Information on weather station seven-day mean temperatures is held in the Library for the period 1 November 1990 to 11 April 1991. Information after 11 April is not available. Information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Community Charge

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 1 May 1991, columns 249-50, if he will publish a similar table showing the net income at which community charge benefit runs out taking account of the community charge reduction scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table.

Notes:

1. The average community charge figures for England, Scotland and Wales take account of the £140 reduction in charge levels and also of the effect of the Community Charge Reduction Schemes (CCRS).
2. The effect of the Community Charge Reduction Schemes (CCRS) on the average community charges for England, Scotland and Wales is based on Budget estimates of projected CCRS spending and not on actual subsidy returns, since these are not yet available.
3. An average community charge figure taking account of CCRS is currently not available for inner London. This is because the Budget estimates of CCRS spending are "modelled" on an England wide basis. A figure will become available once subsidy returns are analysed.
4. The average community charge figure for England takes account of charge substitution.

Local Authority Housing (Transfers)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether residents of former local authority part III homes, which are transferred to the private or voluntary sectors, are eligible for the higher levels of income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Local authorities in England and Wales have a duty under the National Assistance Act 1948 to arrange for the provision of residential accommodation for those in need. They can exercise this by providing accommodation in their own homes or by arranging accommodation in an independent home. In either case, the local authority meets the full cost of the accommodation and care. Similar arrangements apply in Scotland.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health, for Scotland and for Wales, and I are fully committed to the principles of community care as outlined in the White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm. 849) and the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. These include encouraging local authorities to act as enablers rather than providers and to promote and stimulate the development of the independent and voluntary sectors in the provision of care.

We are aware, however, that some local authorities may have sought to dispose of some or all of their residential homes to the private or voluntary sector in order to enable the residents to qualify under present regulations for the higher level of income support and so to reduce financial support by the local authority. While the Government favour a mixed economy in the provision of care, the balance between voluntary, private and public ownership should be determined by the long-term needs of those needing care rather than by short-term financial considerations.

We therefore intend to introduce as soon as possible amending regulations regarding entitlement to income support in such cases. They will make it clear that the benefit position for existing residents who continue to receive residential care under arrangements made by their local authority remains unchanged by a transfer of ownership.

I understand that at the same time as these regulations come into force, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health, for Scotland and for Wales also intend to issue directions to local authorities to make clear the status of residents in a home which is transferred to private ownership by a local authority.

The draft regulations that I have outlined will shortly be considered by the Social Security Advisory Committee. It is our intention that they will take effect at the earliest possible date.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the goods and services which he assesses correspond with the European Community's social or cultural objectives so as to make them eligible for a reduced or zero rate of VAT should the Council of Ministers' proposals to approximate rates of VAT applied by members of the Community be adopted.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On Friday 21 June I placed in the Library my letter of 19 June to the honourable Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) to which was attached a note summarising the previous proposals for the approximation of indirect taxes and the compromise proposals to be presented by the Luxembourg Presidency to ECOFIN on 24 June and an annex giving full details of the Presidency proposals.

These attachments include the list of essential products and goods and services "which correspond to social or cultural policy objectives" which was agreed as a basis for discussion at ECOFIN on 18 March.

However, the list itself is to be defined more closely, and it is not therefore possible to give a list of the items which might fall under it.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has received from European Community Finance Ministers for the closer approximation of VAT rates and excise duties from January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 14 June 1991]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 24 June, at column 374.

Tax-exempt Special Savings Accounts

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the take-up of TESSAs so far.

Mr. Maude: TESSA has made a highly successful start. In its first three months, to 31 March this year, over 2 million people invested more than £5 billion in TESSAs.

Business Rate

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, with regard to the uniform business rate, for each local authority in England and Wales for the financial year 1990-91, (a) the number of appeals that were lodged against its level, (b) the number of appeals that have been heard, separately distinguishing the successful and unsuccessful, (c) the number of appeals that have not yet been heard, (d) the shortest time in days that elapsed between the lodging of an appeal and the decision, (e) the longest time in days that elapsed between the lodging of an appeal and the decision and (f) the longest time in days to date between the lodging of an appeal and the actual hearing which is yet to take place.

Mr. Maples: The information required could not be provided in the format requested without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Nationally some 705,000 appeals had been received by 31 May 1991. About 45,000 of these have been settled—256 at hearings. The arrangements and timing of appeal hearings are the responsibility of the valuation and community tribunal, part of the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Takeovers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of takeovers by overseas companies in the United Kingdom for the latest convenient period: and what was the corresponding figure for overseas takeovers by United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Maples: The latest information was published in CSO Business Bulletin 23/91, "Cross-border Acquisitions and Mergers" (Fourth Quarter 1990). Information up to the first quarter 1991 will be published on 28 June.

Monetary Policy

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to relax monetary policy; and what representations he has had to the effect that it is currently over-tight.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on monetary policy. Interest rates will continue to be set at the level needed to keep sterling within its ERM bands and to bear down on inflation.

Family Expenditure Survey

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects that the results of the family expenditure survey for 1990 will be available.

Mr. Maples: It is expected that the report on the 1990 Family Expenditure Survey will be published in November 1991.

Building Industry

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the construction and building industry regarding the recession and high interest rates.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations.

ECOFIN

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Luxembourg on 24 June. I represented the United Kingdom.

Following the meetings on 3 June and 10 June, the Council again discussed the presidency's proposals for the future of VAT and excise duties in the single market. Agreement was reached, subject to Parliament's views, on a set of Council conclusions. The main points are as follows.

On VAT, all member states declared that they will apply a standard VAT rate of 15 per cent. or more from 1 January 1993. The other member states said that this political declaration should be translated into a directive. I made it clear that the United Kingdom does not believe that a directive is necessary. Statements were made in the minutes of the Council, reflecting these points of view. I also reiterated that the Government have no present intention of making any change to the current United Kingdom rate of 17·5 per cent.

Agreement was also reached on the key aspects of the VAT regime which will enable fiscal frontiers to be abolished after 1992.

There was acceptance in principle of a move at the end of 1996 to the origin system, under which the VAT rate applied to goods and services is that of the country in which they are produced, rather than where they are sold; but this would require a unanimous decision by the Council.

The agreement provides for the retention of all United Kingdom zero rates during the period before any move to the origin system, without prejudice to what happens thereafter.

It was also agreed that member states should have the option of applying one or two reduced rates, not lower than 5 per cent. The United Kindom Government have no present intention of introducing reduced rates.

On excises, agreement was reached on specific minimum rates for petrol, derv, heavy fuel oil, beer and cigarettes. It was agreed that these would be reflected in a directive in due course. The rates agreed are shown in the table.

Excise Duties: Minimum rates in ECUS

	Minimum rate agreed (ecus)
Leaded petrol (1,000 litres)	337
Unleaded petrol (1,000 litres)	287
Diesel (1,000 litres)	245
Heavy fuel oil (1,000 kg)	13
Cigarettes (specific plus ad valorem duties, but excluding VAT)	57 per cent. of retail price (including tax) of cigarettes in the most popular price category[1]
Beer (hl of end product)	[2]1·87

[1] Specific duty element to be between 5 and 55 per cent. of total duty.
[2] Per degree of alcohol.

None of these requires any change in United Kingdom rates of excise duty.

A provisional agreement was reached on a zero rate for wine, heating kerosene and heating gas oil, pending a further report from the Commission on whether a satisfactory control system could be operated in the absence of a positive rate for these products.

Agreement was also reached that rules will be devised to distinguish between commercial and private alcohol and tobacco transactions, which will include minimum indicative levels above which the transactions will be taken to mean, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that they are of a commercial nature. A directive to cover these will be brought forward to accompany the directive on minimum rates of excise duties.

There was no agreement on a minimum rate for spirits. With a nil rate proposed for wine, the proposed rate for spirits would have worsened the current discrimination against, for example, Scotch whisky exports. I argued strongly that this was not acceptable, and secured agreement that the Commission's report should be extended to cover possible distortions in the drinks market. The minimum rate for spirits was therefore left to be decided later on the basis of that report.

I believe that this is a very good agreement for both the United Kingdom and the Community. For the United Kingdom it fully safeguards our zero rates; it will not require us to change any of our tax rates; it will not prevent future Governments and Parliaments from taking a different view about VAT if they want to; and it shows quite clearly that our Community partners have recognised our concerns. For the Community it provides Governments and businesses with the assurances needed to plan for the abolition of all fiscal frontiers from 1 January 1993.

Full details of the Council conclusions will be deposited in the Library of the House as soon as they are received.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers (Advice)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list his Department's scale of charges to farmers seeking advice or assistance.

Mr. Curry: Advice to farmers and growers from the Department is provided principally by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service. There is no generalised scale of charges. Contracts and services are largely tailored to the needs of individual clients and priced accordingly. A published price list would not be appropriate.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has completed his review of the set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement on his proposals for one-year set-aside.

Mr. Curry: A review of the EC five-year set-aside scheme is due to be carried out by the Commission before 1993. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) for details of the one-year set-aside scheme—Official Report, 18 June 1991, c. 125.

Chernobyl

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the time period it will take before the radioactive products from the accident at Chernobyl will be reduced to a level to permit the return of normal hill farming in the areas affected.

Mr. Curry: We were able to reduce the size of the Cumbria post-Chernobyl restricted area at the beginning of this year. Monitoring and research continue with a view to making further reductions just as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising the safety of the food chain.

It is not possible to say when the last of the restrictions will be lifted. However, the "mark and release" and associated compensation arrangements are designed to impose the minimum possible disruption of normal farming practices.

HEALTH

Psychiatry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority (a) the increase or (b) the decrease in hospital bed provision for old age psychiatry for the 12 months ended 31 March.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested in respect of NHS hospitals is given in the table. Health authorities and other statutory agencies also support substantial numbers of elderly mentally ill people in private nursing and residential homes. Further details about NHS bed availability are contained in the Department's annual publication "Summary of Bed Availability", copies of which are available in the Library. March 1990 is the latest date for which this information is held centrally. Details of the number of patients in private nursing and residential homes who are receiving support from the public sector are not collected centrally.

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the current balance of moneys held by hospitals on behalf of long-stay patients; what advice he intends to give to health authorities to ensure that current practice in handling these moneys will be adopted by directly managed units and by national health service trusts; and if he will outline the reasons for the changes in accumulated balances over recent years.

Mr. Dorrell: The balance at 31 March 1991 was estimated at £63·4 million, this being the first significant decrease in balances which had previously risen from £66·1 million in 1988 to £67·8 million in 1990. The Department proposes to write to health authorities and NHS trusts to ensure that both directly managed units and NHS trusts observe good practice and take steps to secure further reduction in the level of the balances. The recent reduction in the level of accumulated balances is attributed to action taken by the NHS management executive in October 1990.

Core Services

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will treat the provision of obstetric services and emergency casualty services as core services to be provided by NHS trust hospitals;

(2) if he will list those core services to be provided by NHS trust hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not the Government's policy to designate such services centrally. District health authorities are responsible for assessing the health needs of their local population and contracting for health services. NHS trusts largely depend on these contracts for their income. Thus it is unlikely that an NHS trust would refuse to provide a service for which there was a local demand. If such a situation did arise, involving a service which needed to be provided locally, and which could not be provided elsewhere, that trust would be directed to provide the designated service.

Severely Disabled People

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters and other representations he has received regarding direct payments by local authorities to severely disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a small number of representations regarding direct payments by local authorities.

Polyscythaemia

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there is any evidence of connections between the disease polyscythaemia and the nuclear industry.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is not aware of any epidemiological studies which suggest a link between Polycythaemia rubra vera and the nuclear industry.

Children's Care

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were in care in each Inner London borough in 1981 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows numbers of children in care in 1981 and in 1990, the latest date for which figures are generally available. Where figures are not available for these years, the most recent year's return has been quoted and the year of the return shown in brackets.

Data for 1990 are provisional.

Research Ethics Committees

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will issue guidance on the membership and duties of research ethics committees.

Mr. Dorrell: We hope to issue this guidance shortly.

Census

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the enumeration of the population of Great Britain in the 1991 census.

Mr. Dorrell: The Registrar General for England and Wales and the Registrar General for Scotland have reported to me and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland that, thanks to a good response from the public and good work by census field staff, the enumeration has gone well over the country as a whole. Initially, census staff were not able to contact around 410,000 households, mainly in city areas; but by the end of May many households had responded to a request to post in their forms to the local census manager and only some 160,000 cases remained unresolved, representing about 0·8 per cent. of all households. Action to reduce this number is continuing, including sending a further request to around 10,000 relevant households in those census districts with the highest proportions of households from whom a form has not yet been received.

A preliminary count of the population present on census day, 21 April, in each local authority district will be published in July in preliminary reports for England and Wales and for Scotland.

RHA Chairmen

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement about the appointment of regional health authority chairmen from 1 August.

Mr. Waldegrave: The terms of office of two of the 14 regional health authority chairmen expire on 31 July 1991. I have made one new appointment and one reappointment. The new chairman of the South East Thames regional health authority is Mr. Peter Barker presently chairman of the Lewisham and North Southwark health authority. He has been appointed for three years and succeeds Sir Peter Baldwin who has served with distinction since 1983.

Sir Colin Walker, chairman of the East Anglian regional health authority, has accepted my invitation to serve for a further term of four years.

Local Authority Homes (Transfers)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the local authorities' continuing responsibilities for residents of former local authority part III homes which are transferred to the private or voluntary sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has announced today, the Government, while wishing to encourage a mixed economy in the provision of care, are taking steps to clarify the status of residents in homes transferred to the private or voluntary sector by local authorities. Residents in a home at the time of transfer will continue to be the responsibility of the local authority, as long as they remain in the home.

After consulting local authority interests I intend to issue directions under section 21(1) of the National Assistance Act 1948 and under paragraph 2 of schedule 8 to the National Health Service Act 1977 to make it clear that the status of residents in a home which is transferred to private ownership by a local authority will remain unchanged by the transfer, in that the full cost of the accommodation and care will continue to be the responsibility of the local authority which placed them there subject to the relevant charging provisions. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland intend to issue similar directions.

It is our intention that the directions will take effect at the same time as the regulations announced today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent by his Department in funding research on myalgic encephalomyelitis since 15 October 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is not directly funding any research on myalgic encephalomyelitis at present, but the Medical Research Council is funding a study at the Institute of Psychiatry which is to investigate chronic fatigue, another term used for ME, in general practitioners' attenders. The MRC and the Department are always willing to consider sympathetically soundly based research proposals in competition with other applications.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis by way of special dietary supplement is available on the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Treatment in individual cases is a matter for the clinician who is treating the patient. Dietary supplements are not normally prescribed under the national health service, but certain nutritional products can be prescribed where necessary for the treatment of a condition.

Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued by the chief medical officers to individuals living in close proximity to flowering crops of oil seed rape.

Mr. Dorrell: No such guidance is issued, and there are no plans to do so. Treatment for allergy is a matter for discussion between the patient and his or her clinician.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any evidence of potentially adverse effects on the health of individuals who live or work in the vicinity of flowering crops of oil seed rape during the months of May and June.

Mr. Dorrell: Some individuals may be allergic to the pollen and other products of oil seed rape, as they are to other crops and plants. There is no conclusive evidence of increases in allergic conditions in vicinities where this crop is cultivated.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report any occupational health studies current, planned or in progress to determine whether flowering crops of oil seed rape cause adverse health effects on those who live or work near fields planted with the crop.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have given financial support for a project based at Aberdeen university examining the possible effects on public health which might be associated with oil seed rape. The results of this study will not be known for some time.

Insulin

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) of 23 May, Official Report, columns 595-6, when he expects discussions about the supply of insulin injectors to be completed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I cannot give an estimate of when the present discussions on making pen systems and needles available on prescription will be completed. The pricing and cost implications of various systems and other technical matters need to be resolved before a decision can be reached.

"The Health of the Nation"

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations he has invited to comment on the Green Paper, "The Health of the Nation."

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: More than 7,000 copies of "The Health of the Nation" have been distributed as part of the consultation process. NHS management and staff, the health professions, patients' organisations, the independent health care sector, employers' and employees' organisations and local authorities have been invited to comment. The views of some 200 voluntary organisations have also been sought.

Registered Homes Act

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to disqualify any person whose registration under the Registered Homes Act 1984 has been cancelled from being registered under the Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to do so. There are various grounds on which registration in respect of a home may be cancelled. They include not only the fitness of the person carrying on the home, but also the adequacy of the accommodation or facilities provided, and of any staffing arrangements. It does not necessarily follow that a person whose registration has been cancelled will never again be fit to run a home of any size or type. The earlier cancellation of registration would, however, be one of the factors which a registration authority would want to take into account when considering whether any later application for registration should be granted.

Food Premises

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list all the organisations that responded to the consultation concerning the draft regulations on the registration of food premises under the Food Safety Act 1990; and which organisations were in favour;

(2) if he will identify the main issues of concern raised by organisations consulted about the registration of food premises under the Food Safety Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A list of those who responded to the consultation exercise has been placed in the Library. The issue which caused most comment was which premises should be covered by the regulations.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he can identify the different categories of food premises it is intended that local authorities will be obliged to register under the Food Safety Act 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give estimates for the number of premises likely to be identified in each category of premises that will be registered under the Food Safety Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The draft regulations propose that premises used for a food business for five or more consecutive days, or for eight or more days in any four consecutive weeks, should be registered. They propose an exemption for two main groups of premises; for those already registered or licensed under food legislation and those which local authority officers would not need to include in their regular inspection programmes. Information on the number of premises in each category is not available centrally.

NHS Spending (Cornwall)

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much expenditure on the national health service has increased in real and cash terms since May 1979 in the Cornwall health authority area and the East Cornwall overlap part of the Plymouth health area; and what are the figures when expressed as expenditure per head of population.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 June 1991]: The annual accounts of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority and those of its predecessor area health authority record total revenue expenditure of £29·11 million (cash) for 1978-79 and £98·58 million cash for 1989-90. Those figures represent increases of 238·7 per cent. in cash terms and 44·7 per cent. in real terms, measured at 1989-90 prices.

Expressed as average expenditure per head of resident population the figures equate to £70 (cash) per head for 1978-79 and £212 (cash) per head for 1989-90 representing cash and real-terms increases of 202·9 per cent. and 29·3 per cent., respectively.

Expenditure data for part of health districts are not collected centrally and prior to 1 April 1982 the Plymouth health authority's predecessor health district was included in the larger Devon area health authority. However, for Devon as a whole the annual accounts of the relevant health authorities record total revenue expenditure averaging £89 (cash) per head of resident population for 1978-79 and £271 (cash) for 1989-90 representing cash and real-terms increases of 204·5 per cent. and 30·3 per cent.

Figures of expenditure per head of resident population tend to vary between individual authorities reflecting patterns of local service provision and the fact that people travel across authority boundaries for treatment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burma

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a date has yet been set for a debate in the United Nations on the resolution on Burma which was co-sponsored by the United Kingdom last November; and what the motion includes on trade sanctions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The resolution is expected to be reconsidered in the course of debate at the 46th United National General Assembly in New York this autumn. The General Assembly works through a pre-set agenda rather than setting precise dates for each debate. The resolution does not refer to trade sanctions.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the European Community has taken in response to the violation of human and political rights in Burma.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The EC suspended all bilateral aid to Burma in 1988. EC countries also refrain from selling military equipment to Burma, and are discussing our proposal for a formal embargo.

Frequent representations have been made to the Burmese: this year EC statements were issued on 4 January and 27 May, and the joint declaration from the EC-ASEAN Foreign Ministers' meeting in Luxembourg on 30-31 May included a reference to Burma.

Soviet Research Ship

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reasons for banning the Soviet research ship Akademick Boris Petrov from British waters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Certain elements of the research programme were unacceptable, particularly regarding research in United Kingdom internal waters and in areas where our defence and security interests may be affected.

Environmental Modification Techniques

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will meet the United Nations Secretary General to discuss the strengthening of the 1977 United Nations convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to meet the United Nations Secretary General to discuss the 1977 United Nations convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to press for an early review conference on the 1977 United Nations convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom will be sending representatives in a personal capacity to the Canadian conference of experts on the use of the environment as a weapon of war on 10-12 July. This meeting is likely to discuss, inter alia, the 1977 UN convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to propose the establishment of a consultative committee under the 1977 United Nations convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques to investigate the environmental destruction in the Gulf region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with other signatory states of the 1977 United Nations convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques, concerning the possibilities of strengthening the regulations of the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has had no such consultations. UK experts will attend, in a personal capacity, the forthcoming Canadian conference of experts on the use of the environment as a weapon of war which we expect is likely to discuss, inter alia, the 1977 UN convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

Kurds

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what military equipment will be deployed by the United Nations forces to protect the Kurds in northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN security guards will be equipped to carry out their mandate.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guarantees of protection have been provided by Her Majesty's Government to the Kurdish population of northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made it clear publicly and to the Kurdish leadership that the deployment of allied forces in northern Iraq was intended as a temporary measure to meet an urgent and overwhelming humanitarian need. We have also made clear that it is our intention to withdraw our forces from Iraq in conditions which will encourage those living in the areas of northern Iraq at present under the control of allied forces to remain.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guarantees of protection were offered by Her Majesty's Government to Kurdish refugees to encourage them to come down from the mountainous regions of northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Allied forces were deployed to northern Iraq to encourage the refugees to come down from the mountains to places where humanitarian relief could be provided effectively and in safety. The operation has succeeded in that objective.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has as to the presence of Iraqi Government agents in the camps of the Kurdish people currently under the protection of United Kingdom forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of reports that Iraqi Government agents may be present in the area of northern Iraq presently controlled by the allied forces.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many military personnel will comprise the United Nations force envisaged for the protection of the Kurds in northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations intends to deploy by mid-July 500 security guards throughout Iraq to complement the UN relief effort.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment of the likelihood of the return of the Kurds to the mountainous areas of northern Iraq once United Kingdom and United States forces have withdrawn.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend that the withdrawal of the allied forces should be completed in conditions which will enable those living in the area at present controlled by allied forces to remain.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances have been received by his Department from the Iraqi authorities that further military action will not be conducted against the Kurdish population after United Kingdom and United States forces have withdrawn from northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and other members of the Security Council have made clear to Iraq the serious consequences of a renewal of its repression of its civilian population. We expect Iraq to continue to comply with Security Council resolution 688.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to offer individual guarantees of protection to Kurds who have assisted United Kingdom forces during the course of their presence in northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is our intention that the allied forces should withdraw from Iraq in conditions which will encourage those living in the area at present under the control of allied forces to remain.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the information provided by Kurdish refugees to United Kingdom armed forces during their presence in northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We take full account of all information reaching us on the situation in Iraq.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the prevention of further military action by the Iraqi armed forced against its Kurdish population.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Security Council resolution 688 calls on Iraq to end its repression of its civilian population. We expect Iraq to continue to comply with that resolution. We have made clear to Iraq the serious consequences of a repression of its civilian population.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of his policy on what guarantees of protection will be provided by Her Majesty's Government to the Kurdish population of northern Iraq once United Kingdom forces have been withdrawn.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is our intention that allied forces should withdraw from Iraq in conditions which will encourage those living in the area of northern Iraq at present controlled by allied forces to remain.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the deployment of United Kingdom forces to protect the Kurds in northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The deployment of allied forces to establish safe havens in northern Iraq was always intended as a temporary measure to meet an urgent and overwhelming humanitarian need. Latest reports show that the immediate humanitarian need has been largely met. Those forces whose task is complete are being withdrawn. But no date has been fixed for the complete withdrawal of allied forces which we intend should take place in conditions which will encourage those living in the area now controlled by allied forces to remain.

Iraq

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the future safety of Iraqi refugees living in camps outside the safe havens.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We expect Iraq to continue to comply with Security Council resolution 688, which calls for an end to Iraq's repression of its civilian population. We would take the gravest view of any renewal of systematic repression.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to the present level of food stocks in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 15 May the UN published a comprehensive report on the situation in Iraq. This report is available in the Library of the House. The United Nations Secretary-General's executive delegate, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, will lead a multi-agency team to Iraq to reassess the situation in early July.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to the potential risks of epidemics of serious diseases in Iraq during the summer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of reports from the International Committee of the Red Cross that diseases related to drinking water have increased in recent weeks. The ICRC is therefore distributing purified water to vulnerable groups throughout Iraq.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the condition in Iraq of (i) the food distribution system, (ii) the supply of drinking water, (iii) sewerage and (iv) irrigation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 15 May the United Nations published a comprehensive report on the situation in Iraq. This is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to the likelihood of famine in Iraq during the summer months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Reports from northern Iraq indicate that this year's harvest will be significantly better than last year's. Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan will report on the situation in the rest of the country when he visits Iraq in July.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the objectives of the United Nations force in northern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations guard's mandate is to protect United Nations personnel, assets and operations and to report any significant incidents.

EC Regulations

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about United Kingdom policy towards the proposals that European Community member states not complying with the directives or regulations are to be subject to fines; and whether this proposal has been discussed by EC foreign ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: In the intergovernmental conference on political union the United Kingdom has put forward a proposal which would allow the European Court of Justice to impose a financial penalty on a member state which failed to comply with an earlier judgment of the European Court of Justice. This proposal was discussed by EC Foreign Ministers at the IGC ministerial meeting on 17 June.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the percentage of Hong Kong citizens entitled to register to vote at present on the Hong Kong electoral roll; and whether there are any plans to increase it.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A total of 1,855,443 names have been included in the current final register of electors, representing a registration rate of 50·2 per cent.

Consideration will be given to improving the registration arrangements in the overall review of the electoral system of Hong Kong to be conducted by the Hong Kong Government after the September election to the Legislative Council.

ENERGY

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to make a decision on the next stage of funding for the Mersey barrage and its associated design and study programme.

Mr. Moynihan: The current phase of the studies is due for completion in July. A decision on work will depend on the assessment of the results of the current phase.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received concerning his decision-making timetable and other aspects of public funding for the Mersey barrage.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of representations on a variety of aspects of work on the proposed Mersey barrage system.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the target of cutting energy consumption in Government Departments by 15 per cent. over five years relates to (a) energy expenditure in money terms, (b) energy expenditure in real terms or (c) energy use in fuel value terms.

Mr. Wakeham: The target of the energy efficiency campaign on the Government estate is to achieve a 15 per cent. reduction in weather-corrected energy consumption per unit of floor area, converted to expenditure using standard fuel prices. Using standard fuel prices eliminates the effect of changing fuel prices; and introducing floor area helps to eliminate the distorting effect of the changing size of Departments' estates.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 117-18, if he will give for (a) 1987-88, (v) 1988-89, (c) 1989-90 and (d) 1991-92 estimates, the total costs of electricity privatisation, breaking down the figures for each year into (i) underwriting costs, (ii) selling and broking commissions, (iii) receiving bank costs, (iv) marketing, (v) advisers' fees and (vi) other costs.

Mr. Wakeham: Total expenditure on electricity privatisation was as follows:

Year	£ million (VAT inclusive)
1987-88	0·8
1988-89	5·5
1989-90	12·5

Prior to 1990-91 there was no expenditure on items (i) to (iv) inclusive and only £0·2 million on item (vi) in 1989-90. For 1991-92 the Department has sought provision, through the supply estimates, for £116·7 million. Expenditure in 1991-92 is still the subject of commercial negotiation and it would be inappropriate to give further details at this time.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what factors account for the difference in the total underwriting costs given in his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 117-18, and the sum of the costs given in his answers of 28 November 1990, Official Report, column 416, and 25 April, Official Report, column 498.

Mr. Wakeham: The principal reason for the difference is that, following a re-classification, overseas underwriting is now included under the category "Selling and Broking Commissions". In addition, the underwriting costs referred to in my reply of 18 June also included the lead underwriting costs of £0·4 million on which information was not sought in the question of 28 November 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 117-18, if he will break down the underwriting total of £51·5 million into (a) United Kingdom primary underwriting for the regional electricity companies, (b) United Kingdom sub-underwriting for the regional electricity companies, (c) overseas underwriting for the regional electricity companies, (d) United Kingdom sub-underwriting for National Power and PowerGen and (e) overseas underwriting for National Power and PowerGen.

Mr. Wakeham: A breakdown of the £51·5 million previously reported is as follows:

	£ million
Regional electricity companies
United Kingdom primary underwriting:	6·7
United Kingdom sub-underwriting:	29·5
United Kingdom lead underwriting	0·4
National Power and PowerGen
United Kingdom sub-underwriting	14·9
Sub-total	51·5
Regional electricity companies
Overseas commissions	13·3
National Power and PowerGen
Overseas commissions	6·0
Total	70·8

Uranium Mines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department or the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority have offered the assistance of experts to the Governments of (a) Hungary, (b) Czechoslovakia and (c) Yugoslavia in the technical clean-up and restoration of (i) formerly used and (ii) currently operating uranium mines.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Neither my Department nor the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has made any formal offers of such assistance, though the AEA has had informal discussions with Czechoslovakia.

Biomass Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make an assessment of the opportunities existing for United Kingdom based agro-energy research institutes and organisations for the development of biomass energy development in Hungary.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department has no plans at present to make such an assessment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which auditing firms against which the Government are currently engaged in litigation have supplied his Department's inspectors at any time since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: None as far as I am aware.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to abolish the audit requirements for two-shareholder small family-owned limited companies.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Financial Reporting Review Panel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases he has referred to the financial reporting review panel.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make it his policy to place in the Library a copy of all documents obtained by his representative on the Auditing Practices Board;

(2) whether he will propose legislation under which it will be an offence for the Auditing Standards Board not to provide information to a Member of the House which it provides to auditing firms.

Mr. Redwood: No doubt the Auditing Practices Board will bear in mind the hon. Member's interest when deciding its policy on access to its papers.

European Single Market

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the number of directives aimed at the creation of a single market within the European Community which have been enacted in the national legislatures of each member state and subsequently implemented; and what percentage of the total number of directives this represents in each case.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Commission's sixth report to the Council and European Parliament was presented to the Internal Market Council on 18 June. The report shows that out of 126 measures due in force on 31 May 1991 member states have the following record:

	1 Measures not implemented	2 Measures implemented	3 Derogations	4 Not applicable	5 Percentage implemented[1]
Denmark	12	107	0	7	90
France	18	103	0	5	86
United Kingdom	20	99	1	6	84
Portugal	25	96	3	2	80
Germany	25	95	0	6	80
Greece	29	87	5	5	77
Belgium	31	89	0	6	75
Netherlands	34	86	0	6	73
Luxembourg	37	81	0	8	71
Spain	38	83	2	3	70
Ireland	44	74	1	7	65
Italy	69	52	0	5	45

[1] Includes columns 3 and 4.

Burma

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Burma currently receives export credit guarantees.

Mr. Sainsbury: Guarantees for medium and long-term credits in connection with exports from the United Kingdom to Burma have not been available from ECGD since September 1988. Guarantees are, however, available for short-term credits normally secured by irrevocable letters of credit.

Co-operatives

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what United Kingdom organisations his Department has consulted on the proposal for a European statute on co-operatives, mutuals and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Redwood: The European statute proposed by the European Commission on co-operatives, mutuals and voluntary organisations is still at draft stage. However, a large number of organisations in the United Kingdom are already aware of it. Should a formal proposal emerge from the Commission, the Government will consult widely among interested organisations, as is the normal practice.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 June.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

East Timor

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if, at his recent meeting with Indonesia's Minister for Research, J B Habibie, the question of the illegal occupation of East Timor was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: East Timor was not discussed. The Indonesian authorities are aware of our views on East Timor.

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 151, when he expects to complete his examination of the case for making an ex gratia payment to the guardsmen injured at the Batus range on 7 July 1989.

The Prime Minister: As I have already indicated the proper grounds for paying compensation is on the basis of legal liability.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will receive a deputation of hon. Members to discuss the case of Guardsmen Sean Povey, Adrian Hicks and John Ray.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 June 1991]: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) earlier today.

Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish an inter-departmental review of the public health implications of planting crops of oil seed rape near central populations.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office announced in the House on 8 February 1990 at columns 1125-32 that financial support had been offered for a project based at Aberdeen university examining the possible effects on public health which might be associated with oil seed rape. I see no reason for further action at this stage.

Co-operatives

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements he has made to co-ordinate Department's views on the proposed European statute on co-operatives, mutuals and voluntary organisations.

The Prime Minister: The European statute proposed by the European Commission on co-operatives, mutuals and voluntary organisations is still at draft stage. Given the wide coverage of the statute, a number of Departments have an interest. There are continuing inter departmental contracts at official level to co-ordinate views as necessary.

Council of Europe

Mr. Ward: To ask the Prime Minister if he has made any changes to the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the 43rd session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his reply, 20 June 1991, c. 235]: The changes I have made will take effect from Friday 28 June.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

8. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the total number of city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In addition to the seven CTCs already running, a further six will be opening in September this year. I recently announced that CTCs will also be built in Bristol and Derby. These will bring the total number to 15. I am considering the prospects of getting plans for further CTCs under way and I am looking at a number of other interesting ways in which the benefits of CTCs might be spread through the education service.

24. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the total cost to public funds of his city technology college policy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To 31 March 1991, the total cost to public funds of the city technology college programme was £103·9 million, including some £12 million in recurrent costs. Current public expenditure plans provide for a total of £250·7 million to be spent on the programme to the end of financial year 1993-94, including both capital and recurrent costs. These figures are net of the private sector contribution, which will represent at least 20 per cent. of the capital cost of the programme.

Truancy

11. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the current daily level of truancy among schoolchildren.

Mr. Fallon: It is clear from evidence collected by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools and others that truancy constitutes a major problem in some schools. Our proposals on school attendance will stimulate all schools to give a higher priority to attendance and require figures to be published.

Standard Assessment Tasks

15. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received on changes to standard assessment tasks.

16. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on standard assessment tasks and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and I continue to receive and welcome the views of a wide range of people involved in the recent testing of seven-year-olds. All such representations feed directly into the wider evaluation now under way, and help to inform the development of the tests to be used in 1992.

School Transport

17. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding amendments to existing legislation affecting school transport.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend regularly receives representations suggesting various interpretations and amendments to the law on school transport.

Schools Amalgamation, Wandsworth

18. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek a report of the views of parents of children attending schools in Wandsworth that Wandsworth council is seeking to amalgamate, before deciding on the council's proposals.

Mr. Eggar: If the council wishes to amalgamate some of its schools, it is required to publish proposals under section 12 of the 1980 Act. Parents of children attending schools affected by such proposals will have the opportunity to make their views known during the two-month objection period following publication. My right hon. and learned Friend will take those objections into account in making his decisions on proposals which come before him.

Sixth-form Colleges

19. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the response to his proposals for the future of sixth-form colleges.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The initial response has been encouraging. Many college principals have indicated that they welcome the opportunity to exercise greater control over their own affairs.

Secondary Schools

20. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to change secondary school organisation.

Mr. Fallon: The organisation of secondary schools is dealt with in the Education Acts 1980 and 1988. My right hon. and learned Friend has already announced the Government's plans to restructure provision for the 16 to 19 age range, including sixth-form colleges. These are set out in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century". We shall keep the need for other changes under review.

Teacher Appraisal

21. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure teacher appraisal is introduced throughout the school system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to introduce regulations later this summer to require local education authorities and the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools to arrange for the appraisal of all teachers starting in September 1991.

Reading (Teacher Training)

22. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will establish an inquiry into the way teachers are trained to teach reading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 23 April 1991, Official Report, columns 891-92.

Local Education Authorities

23. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he is considering on the role of local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he is considering regarding the role of the local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have announced proposals for transferring further education colleges and sixth-form colleges out of local authority control. I have also made it clear that I expect grant-maintained status to become over time the natural organisational model for most schools. These changes will have a significant impact on the role of education authorities, transferring responsibility for day-to-day management to individual schools and colleges.

Grant-maintained Schools

25. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have now opted for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A total of 200 schools have now voted in favour of seeking grant-maintained status. Of these, 155 schools have so far published proposals for grant-maintained status. We have approved 88, rejected 13 and have yet to decide the remaining 54.

26. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the aims of the policy relating to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Grant-maintained schools policy aims to increase parental choice, to make schools more responsive to local needs, to enable resources to be more effectively used for the benefit of pupils and to foster higher educational standards.

Expenditure Statistics

27. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average expenditure per pupil at primary and secondary level in 1979; and what is the latest available figure.

Mr. Fallon: In 1978-79, net institutional expenditure per pupil was £365 in nursery and primary schools and £530 in secondary schools. At 1988-89 prices this represents some £805 and £1,165 respectively. In 1988-89, the latest year for which information is available, the equivalent figures are £1,100 per nursery and primary pupil and £1,695 per secondary pupil.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to encourage schools to purchase private services to deal with special educational needs; and if this includes purchase of the hospital psychologist service for educational psychology.

Mr. Fallon: Where schools have delegated budgets under local management of schools they are free to purchase services from anywhere and will be looking to ensure that the services they receive provide value for money and are effective.

Nuclear Physics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the nuclear physics section of the laboratories in the 1990s, recently published by the Science and Engineering Research Council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The recently published report "The Laboratories in the 1990s" was prepared for the SERC in July 1990. The section on nuclear physics describes the plans for support of the subject, as they then stood, by the council's nuclear physics board. These plans have, however, now been overtaken by SERC's major review of its forward commitments.

A-levels

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of (a) A-levels and (b) the proposed ordinary and advanced diplomas.

Mr. Eggar: The White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st century", published last month, makes clear the Government's commitment to maintaining A-levels and the standards they represent. Formal consultation will begin shortly on the new system of ordinary and advanced diplomas.

Women Teachers

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the proportion of women in the teaching profession was for the years 1979, 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Fallon: Women teachers as a percentage of qualified teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England for the years requested are shownin the table.

	Per cent.
1979	60
1985	61
1990	65

Inner London

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take powers to enable himself to become involved in the problems of inner London education authorities if such a request is made to him by one third of the elected councillors.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend already has powers to direct any local education authority to operate reasonably and to carry out its statutory responsibilities; and in addition has the power to approve the management structure of, and staff appointments to, the inner London education authorities.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Waste Incineration

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had, when, and with whom regarding the incineration of toxic and hazardous wastes in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At a meeting of the Anglo-Irish conference on 31 January 1991, I exchanged views on this and other environmental issues with the Minister for the Environment in the Irish Republic, Mr. Flynn. I have also discussed with the management of Du Pont (UK) Ltd., their proposal for a hazardous waste incinerator and have visited the company's site at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether it is intended that plastic and throwaway paper items can be disposed of in the proposed incinerator at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: The incinerator proposed by Du Pont (UK) Ltd. would not be intended for the incineration of general municipal waste. It would be a specialist facility designed to dispose of certain industrial wastes produced in the chemical and allied industries by a process known as high temperature incineration.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to monitor the stack emissions of the proposed incinerator at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: The alkali and radiochemical inspectorate of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland would be responsible for ensuring that the emissions from the stack of any such incinerator, once started, were monitored for compliance with the standards prescribed by the Department. In addition to its own direct monitoring of emissions, the inspectorate would audit the routine in-house monitoring undertaken by the operator.

Health Service

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the perinatal mortality rate in each of the last 10 years at (a) Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, (b) Belfast City hospital, (c) Mater hospital, Belfast and (d) Ulster hospital;

(2) what was the mortality rate for women in each of the last 10 years in the obstetric units at (a) Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, (b) Belfast City hospital, (c) Mater hospital, Belfast and (d) Ulster hospital.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held centrally, but it should be noted that the perinatal mortality rate for the whole of Northern Ireland has fallen sharply over the past decade from a level of 15·6 in 1980—some 17 per cent. higher than in Great Britain—to 8·2 in 1989 when the rate for England and Wales was 8·3. Despite the improvements the rate still varies significantly within Northern Ireland between socio-economic classes and geographical areas.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deliveries were recorded in each year since 1989 in the obstetric unit of the Ulster hospital.

Mr. Hanley: The deliveries, including live and still births, recorded were:

Year	Deliveries
1989	1923
1990	1929

Radioactivity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the time period it will take before the radioactive products from the Chernobyl accident will be reduced to a level to permit the full use of agricultural land in the province.

Mr. Hanley: There has been no change in the use of agricultural land as a consequence of the Chernobyl accident.

There is a slow fall in the levels of radioactivity in sheep from the restricted areas. Radiocaesium remains available for uptake by plants in the affected upland area due to the absence in the soil of minerals which would render the radiocaesium unavailable to plants.

It is not possible to predict how long restrictions on movement and slaughter of sheep from these areas will remain in place. Monitoring of sheep continues and restrictions will continue to be lifted when the safety of the food chain can be assured.

Extradition

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the persons who have been extradited for terrorist offences since 1980 (a) from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland; and (b) from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland, giving the year in which the extradition occured and indicating the outcome of the case.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Extradition from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland

Person	Year	Outcome
Dominic McGlinchey	1984	Convictions quashed by Northern Ireland Court of Appeal.
James A. G. Shannon	1984	Convictions quashed by Northern Ireland Court of Appeal.
John McFarland Fletcher	1987	Convicted in 1988 for charges relating to possession of firearms.
Gerard M. Harte	1988	Extradited in August 1988 and convicted for a series of offences in December 1988.
Robert P. Russell	1988	Conviction for attempted murder quashed by Court of Appeal. Served sentence for convictions relating to escape from Her Majesty's Prison Maze.
Paul Anthony Kane	1989	Extradited and convicted for offences relating to escape from Her Majesty's Prison Maze.

Note: These dates are the years on which they were physically extradited not the date on which their extradition was ordered.

Dominic McGlinchey	1985	Convicted of offences committed in the Republic of Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the financial adjustment fixed by each charging local authority in Scotland for 1991-92 to be paid by each charge payer as a result of the failure, anticipated or actual, of all charge payers to pay charges lawfully demanded; and what were the comparable figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally. However, I understand that a number of authorities included an additional sum in their 1991-92 community charge to compensate for shortfall of income caused by non-collection in 1989-90 and 1990-91. These include Lothian (£48) and Strathclyde (£42). I am not aware of any comparable addition to the 1990-91 charges.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 7 May, Official Report, column 415 -16, what is the Scottish average rate of local income tax required to replace the budget income from the poll tax in 1991-92, including rebates and after receipt of community charge grant.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The rate is 6·0 pence in the pound.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table of Scotland's share of United Kingdom gross domestic product per head of population excluding the continental shelf for each year since 1961.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The table gives the information requested for each year since 1971, the earliest year for which this information is available on a consistent basis.

Year	Scottish gross domestic product[1] per head (UK[3] = 100)
1971	93·7

Crofting

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of refusals under the crofter buildings grant and loan scheme in the years 1988 and 1989 to applicants living in council houses, on the grounds that the applicant is already reasonably accommodated within working distance of the croft.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No applicants were refused assistance under the crofters building grants and loans scheme in 1988 and 1989 on the grounds stated.

Tree Preservation Orders

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set a timetable for consultation on and reform of the legislation in Scotland regarding tree preservation orders.

Mr. Lang: I hope to issue in the autumn a consultation paper making proposals for improving the present system of tree preservation in Scotland, for implementation when a legislative opportunity is available.

Severely Disabled People

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what provisions regional councils are empowered to make payments to severely disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under section 12 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, local authorities may make payments to severely disabled people only in an emergency. Such payments must reduce the need for social work assistance in other forms.

Cancer Screening

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards shortening the waiting time for cervical smear tests results as proposed in his statement of 3 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards have made significant progress. All but one health board—Grampian—have achieved, or bettered, the 14-day target for reporting results which I set in December 1990. Grampian are reporting results in 17 days, a considerable improvement on the position in 1990. The board is continuing to look at ways of further improving its turnaround time.

I am pleased that all but one board have achieved what was, for many, a stretching target and I applaud the dedication and commitment of staff in boards who have made these improvements. I am glad that many women in Scotland are now having to wait a much shorter period for the results of their tests.

Radioactivity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the time it will take before the radioactive products from the accident at Chernobyl will be reduced to a level to permit the return to normal hill farming.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to offer a reliable estimate of the time by which radioactivity levels in all sheep in the Scottish restricted areas will have fallen below the Government's action level.

Only a very small proportion of hill farms have been subject to controls on sheep movements, and the administration of these controls is designed to ensure the minimum disruption to normal farming practices on restricted farms. Research and monitoring of radioactivity levels in sheep on restricted farms continues, with the aim of releasing the remaining restricted farms when this can be done without compromising the safety of the food chain.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 6 June, Official Report, columns 654-5, if he will list the items included in the figure of £148,000 spend on energy efficiency in 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 June 1991]: The figure of £148,000 includes the following items:

Draughtproofing (including renewal of windows)	54,000
Relamping	31,000
Survey and design fees	30,000
Lighting control system	11,500
Heating control improvements including boiler overhaul	18,000
Upgrading of electrical equipment	2,000
Power Factor Correction	1,500

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1), pursuant to the answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 221, when and why information on energy consumption and expenditure in the form referred to in his answer of 10 May 1990, Official Report, column 214, ceased to be available for 1989-90;

(2) when he will be able to provide 1990-91 figures on (a) energy expenditure and (b) energy consumption in units to update those given for 1989-90 in the answers of 10 May 1990, Official Report, column 214.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 June 1991]: I regret that the energy consumption figures for 1989-90 given to the hon. Gentleman on 10 May 1990 were based on information which has subsequently been found to be incomplete and inaccurate. Information in the form requested for the period prior to 1 April 1990 is therefore not available.

The Scottish Office assumed direct responsibility for maintaining these records from 1 April 1990 and I shall be writing shortly to the hon. Gentleman with details for 1990-91.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Broadcasting of Proceedings

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will arrange for cabling to be provided so that the broadcasts of parliamentary proceedings will be available throughout the Palace of Westminster and the precincts.

Mr. MacGregor: In its fourth report of last Session on "Computer Services for Members" (HC 614), the Services Committee recommended that steps should be taken towards the installation of a single high-capacity cable network in the Commons part of the Palace of Westminster and the outbuildings capable of carrying terrestrial, cable and satellite television signals as well as a full range of information technology services. I am hoping to be able to arrange a debate on that report in the near future. It will be for the House to decide at an appropriate moment whether the services transmitted over such a cable network should include a feed of proceedings in either or both Houses.

DEFENCE

Parachute Regiment

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that the proposed reduction in the strength of the Parachute Regiment will not prevent the officers and non-commissioned officers of this regiment from having a balanced and worthwhile career structure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Consultation within the Army on the future structure of the regiments and corps is now underway. The need to maintain balanced and worthwhile career structures will be taken fully into account.

Victory Parade

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish details of the estimated costs of the Gulf war victory parade on 21 June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The welcome home parade and reception which took place last Friday was generously hosted by the Lord Mayor and corporation of the City of London who met the principal costs of the event, including those of the lunch to which all those marching were invited.

Hawk Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the memorandum of understanding presently being negotiated between British Aerospace and the Indonesian Government for the supply of upgraded Hawk aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our practice to comment on defence exports to specific countries.

Rapier Missiles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for 10 rapier 2000 surface-to-air missiles.

Mr. Alan Clark: I do not recognise the order to which the hon. Member refers.

Aviation Support Ship

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for an aviation support ship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We are committed to maintaining an amphibious capability in the longer term, and plan to order an aviation support ship to provide dedicated helicopter support for our forces. The timing of the order has yet to be decided.

Sea Harrier

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for a multi-functional air-to-air launcher rail for the Sea Harrier FRS 2 aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: No decision has yet been taken on the timing of this order.

Main Battle Tanks

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is considering as part of "Options for Change" the equipping of territorial units with main battle tanks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Helicopters

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to place orders for his British Army to acquire the Longbow Apache helicopter; and how many aircraft will be ordered.

Mr. Alan Clark: The British Army's future requirement for attack helicopters is currently under review and a number of options, including the Apache, are being studied. We do not expect to make a decision on the choice of helicopter, or the size of any order, in the immediate future.

Hercules Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the replacement of the Hercules aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: We plan to replace the Hercules early in the next decade.

Batus Firing Range

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list, with dates, of all United Kingdom and other units who were authorised to fire live 76 mm HESH rounds on the Batus live firing range between January 1984 and January 1986.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Available records do not contain a comprehensive list of units which fired 76 mm HESH rounds at Batus during the period in question.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the relevant documents showing the number of blind 76 mm HESH rounds fired, logged but unlocated and uncleared lying outside designated impact areas on the Suffield, Batus training area for the period January 1984 to January 1986.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All 76 mm HESH blinds reported at Batus during the period were destroyed by ammunition technicians. However, the essence of training at Batus is the ability to fire and manoeuvre within the whole of a large, live-firing area and it would not necessarily be obvious that a round had failed to explode.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the board of inquiry into the Grenadier accident at Batus of 7 July 1989 was (a) ordered to investigate and (b) took any evidence as to how an unexploded round lay uncleared on the Batus range before 7 July 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry was asked to investigate all the circumstances surrounding the accident to the three guardsmen. As part of their investigations the board examined the procedures at Batus for reporting and clearing unexploded rounds.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the convening order for the Army board of inquiry into events of 7 July 1989 on the Batus range required investigation into the question as to why a round remained uncleared outside an impact area on the Batus live firing range.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The convening order directed the board of inquriy to consider all the circumstances that contributed to the accident on 7 July 1989.

The Gulf

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 127, what is his Department's assessment as to the consequences for water supply, public health and food distribution of the damage to Iraqi conventional power stations by coalition bombing during the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has conducted no such assessment, although the former United Nations Under-Secretary General Ahtisaari produced a report on the situation in Iraq after the conflict following his visit to that country in March 1991. It is believed that Iraq continues to suffer power shortages and that, as a consequence, some areas have reduced water supply.

Grenadier Guardsmen (Accident)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray were requested to give evidence before the board of inquiry into the circumstances which led to their serious injuries in July 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry did not take evidence directly from the three Guardsmen. When the board was convened at Batus the soldiers had been returned to the United Kingdom for medical treatment. The board did, however, consider the transcript of an interview with LCpl Ray at Medicine Hat City hospital, Canada.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what informal undertakings were given after the serious injuries affecting Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray in July 1989 that compensation would be paid to them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are aware of none. If any such undertakings were given, they were without authorisation.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what terms of reference the board of inquiry was set up that inquired into the cases of Guardsmen Hicks, Povey and Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry was asked to investigate all the circumstances and record all the evidence relevant to its inquiries. In particular, the board was asked to establish the cause of the accident; how it occurred; whether the soldiers were on duty; whether any person involved, wilfully or by neglect, contravened any recognised orders, procedures or drills; whether a mechanical fault or failure contributed to the accident; whether there was any lack of supervision or other matters which required rectification, the medical attention available, what action, if any, was necessary to prevent a recurrence; whether the accident was correctly reported in line with the Batus Range standing orders; and any other matter which the President of the board considered relevant. The inquiry was also asked with recording what action had been taken, or would be taken, to prevent a recurrence and to make recommendations to that end.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been received from senior officers in the Grenadier Guards urging that compensation be paid to Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: One such representation has been received.

Fairford Air Tattoo

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what official status has been granted to the Fairford international air tattoo as a Gulf salute; and if he will explain the procedure by which such official status is designated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None; events organised by non-governmental organisations, such as the international air tattoo, do not have official status.

Training Exercises (Accidents)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for the last five years the individual ex-gratia payments made to service personel for injuries received while on training exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following is a list of ex-gratia payments made to date (24 May 1991) for training incidents which occurred between 8 December 1986 and 15 May 1987.

£9,500
£4,000
£45,000
£3,500
£15,000
£116,000
£675,000
£3,017

All these incidents involved MOD negligence.

Cambodia

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government has provided training for the forces of the Cambodian resistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: From 1983 until 1989 Her Majesty's Government provided training to the armed forces of the Cambodian non-communist resistance, that is the Khmer People's National Liberation armed forces and the Armee Nationale Sihanoukienne. The purpose was to strengthen the position of those forces in relation to the more powerful forces of the Khmer Rouge and in their struggle against the Vietnamese imposed regime in Phnom Penh. There has never been and will never be any British assistance or support, military or otherwise, for the Khmer Rouge. Since 1989 Her Majesty's Government have not been involved in any way in training, equipping or supplying the forces of any of the Cambodian parties. EMPLOYMENT

Skill Centre, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has had with (a) the chairman of the South Glamorgan TEC, (b) Astra Training Services and (c) the Cardiff city council as planning authority and ground landlord concerning the future use of the skill centre land and buildings at Western avenue, Galealflor.

Mr. Jackson: My Department has had no consultation with the organisations listed. Negotiation about the sale of the freehold of land and buildings owned by my Department are being conducted on my behalf by King and Company.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for extending, redeveloping or disposing of the skill centre land and buildings he owns and leases at Western avenue, Galealflor, Cardiff.

Mr. Jackson: The land and buildings at Western avenue, Cardiff, are in the process of being marketed by King and Company. It will be for the purchaser to decide any future plans for development.

The leasehold interest in the site at Western avenue, Cardiff, was conveyed to Astra Training Services Ltd. on completion of the sale of the training businesses.

Job Clubs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by address all the job clubs (a) in Leeds metropolitan district and (b) in Leeds, West constituency.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fodgen, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Unemployment

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how many unemployment has increased since October 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Between May 1991 and October 1990, the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom, rose by 539,400.

Foreign Exchange Services

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has surveyed tourists about the charges levied by businesses providing a foreign exchange currency service.

Mr. Forth: I have made no such surveys, but I am aware of complaints made by overseas visitors to Ministers and to the tourist boards about the insufficiency of information on the exchange rates and commission charges applicable. Commission and other charges and exchange rates offered by foreign exchange currency businesses are best determined by competition in the market. However, the Government believe that for competition to be effective the customer should have adequate information concerning the exchange rates and commission charges that apply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry proposes to make regulations shortly under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which will set out requirements on how bureaux de change display their exchange rates and other charges.

National Union of Mineworkers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost so far of undertaking the legal action by the trade union certification officer against the president and secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The prosecution was brought by the independent Certification Officer for Trade Unions and Employers' Associations, to whom detailed questions about such matters should be addressed. I understand from the certification officer, however, that the total legal and professional costs arising from the preparation and conduct of the prosecution case are likely to be in the order of £17,000. The costs arising from the preparation and conduct of the defence are not yet known.

WALES

Research and Development (EC Funding)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of receipts for each standard region of the United Kingdom from ESPRIT, RACE, BRITE and other European Community framework funds for research and development.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Unfortunately it is not possible to provide a regional breakdown for allocation of EC funds. However, United Kingdom organisations are very successful in securing funding from the Community's R and D programmes, obtaining approximately 20 per cent. of the funding available under the Community's European R and D framework programme.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the last 10 years, and for each local education authority (a) the number of educational psychologists employed; and if he will also represent (a) as a ratio per 100 of children of school age resident in the local education authority area.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Local Government

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the date and time of publication of his document "The Structure of Local Government in Wales" and indicate (a) the date and time at which he intends the document shall be available at the Vote Office and (b) the date and time of its provision by his Department to the Vote Office.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The consultation document "The Structure of Local Government in Wales" was sent to all Members representing Welsh constituencies on Monday 17 June. Fifty copies of the document were delivered by hand to the Vote Office for release at 3.30 pm on the same day, and copies were also placed in the Library of the House. At the request of the Vote Office, a further 50 copies of the document were sent on 20 June, and a further 100 copies on 24 June.

Distribution of the document to a wide range of public and private sector bodies began immediately after completion of my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 17 June.

Acute Beds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of acute beds in national health service hospitals in each health authority in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 23 May 1991]: The figures, from 1974, are shown in the following table.

For more than 20 years it has been a policy of both Labour and Conservative Governments to rationalise the provision of beds in the NHS to take account of changes in medical practice. These changes have led to patients having shorter stays in hospital, for instance in maternity confinements. Furthermore, elective surgery is increasing being undertaken on a day case basis.

Bed numbers are no indication of the level of health care; rather, the crucial factor is the number of patients treated. Between 1979-90, the number of in-patients treated has risen by 36 per cent., compared with 6 per cent. between 1974-79, the number of out-patients rose by 28 per cent. compared with a fall of 3 per cent. between 1974-79 and the number of day cases has risen by 246 per cent. since 1979.

I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising this question and I am sure that he will agree that it would be nonsense to base success in the NHS on a bed number rather than on quality of service promised to patients.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cash Benefits

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will commission a study into the impact on incentives to work of providing demand-led cash benefits for families, where extra income is received with the addition of each new child.

Mr. Jack: The importance of work incentives was taken into account during the development of the 1988 social security reforms. The introduction of family credit—the income-related benefit for working families with children—and aligned benefits assessed on net rather than gross earnings improved incentives for low-income working families. These benefits take the number of children into consideration so there is no loss of incentive if the family increases in size. Now only a very small proportion of working families would be better off not working, and claiming income support.

Performance Indicators

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department has taken to involve consumer views in the development of performance indicators.

Mr. Jack: This Department has a long-standing commitment to maintaining good relations with our customers and their representative bodies and have sought their views on the service we provide. Sampling of customer opinion has been carried out annually since 1984 in local offices. Results are analysed and, since the 1989-90 exercise, have been fed into the target setting process. An external survey was commissioned in 1990 to provide a nationally representative picutre which in effect validates the national results of our own customer opinion sampling.

The launch of the benefits and contributions agencies this year, in addition to our two existing agencies, has given us a springboard to improve further working relationships with these groups. Managers will have more freedom to respond to the needs of their area and there will be many local initiatives. Nationally, external surveys will in future be undertaken annually and, in addition to specific quality of service targets, the Benefits Agency now has a customer satisfaction target. Their success in attaining this target will be measured by the results of these surveys. The contributions unit, now the Contributions Agency, commissioned a broad-based survey of contributions customers in February 1991 to establish their requirements and priorities; this will report in July 1991. A regular series of contributions conferences was also established in July 1990. Both of these will be used in the development of targets and performance indicators.

Further details of Benefits Agency and Contributions Agency programmes for this year can be found in their published annual business plans which are available in the Library.

Household Incomes

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will seek to reduce the period between publication of the family expenditure survey and publication of an analysis of household incomes by quintile and decile groups.

Mr. Jack: Once we have received the family expenditure data from the Central Statistical Office, we need to check and analyse data and discuss resulting queries with CSO. The time taken to produce an analysis of equivalised household incomes depends on the extent of the queries and the speed with which they can be resolved. We are actively considering what action can be taken to speed up and improve these processes.

Residential Care Homes

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress is now being made to introduce regional variations in the amount of income support payable to meet the fees of private and voluntary homes outside the Greater London area.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no current plans to introduce regional variations beyond the present addition for the Greater London area. Information from the Price Waterhouse survey and other sources does not show a sufficiently secure basis for further geographical variation.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information his Department collects on the destination of elderly people who leave residential or nursing homes.

Miss Widdecombe: No such information is collected.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has on whether elderly people have been obliged to leave the residential or nursing homes in which they were living because they were unable to meet the fees.

Miss Widdecombe: We are not aware of any instance in which residents relying on income support have been evicted because they could not afford the fees.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received on the subject of income support levels to meet the costs of residential and nursing homes in the past six months.

Miss Widdecombe: Several representations have been received recently, both from individuals and representative bodies.

TRANSPORT

Rail Tickets

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require British Rail to ensure that all return tickets issued from eastern Europe to destinations in the United Kingdom inform customers of the procedure to be adopted for booking return tickets.

Mr. McLoughlin: No.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that the restriction to London Victoria of facilities to book return rail tickets to Soviet destinations is publicised at all points of entry.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. This is a matter for British Rail.

Road Crashes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each quarter starting in the first quarter of 1987 the annual ratio to the distance travelled of the number of fatalities and serious injuries in road crashes.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table. It is given in the form of a rate of fatal and serious casualties per billion vehicle kilometres. Data for 1990 are provisional.

British Rail

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will amend British Rail's quality of service objectives to require it to provide facilities to permit reservations to Russian destinations to be made at major British Rail outlets.

Mr. McLoughlin: No.

Casualty Reduction Campaign

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the casualty reduction campaign brief.

Mr. Chope: A copy of the campaign brief has been placed in the Library.

Casualty Reductions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research projects on casualty reduction are being undertaken; and when are reports expected to be published.

Mr. Chope: Research is being carried out on a wide range of issues in road and vehicle safety. Main research areas on road user safety include driver behaviour, road safety education, pedestrian accident causation, engineering measures for accident prevention, enforcement, and rehabilitation. The vehicle safety research programme includes side impact protection for car occupants, motor cycle safety, pedestrian protection measures in vehicle design, HGV accident investigation, vehicle lighting and signalling systems.

Research reports giving the results of research are published regularly.

Transport Council

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the meeting of the European Community Transport Council on 20-21 June.

Mr. Rifkind: I attended the first day of the meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers which was held in Luxembourg on 20 and 21 June. My hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic was present on the second day.

I am extremely pleased with the progress made at the Council, especially the agreements reached both on the development of Community railways and the need for safer design of vehicles.

The railways agreement is an important step towards liberalisation, allowing access by individual rail companies to the railway systems of other member states for the purpose of international combined transport operations. It will encourage greater use of rail freight services thus acting to alleviate congestion on roads. The Commission reported that its work on the combined transport network was progressing well and a report should be produced by the end of the year. A regulation was agreed, providing for the replacement of public service obligations, in the public transport sector, by public service contracts. The amended regulation will bring greater transparency to dealings between governments and transport undertakings, particularly railways.

Other inland transport matters discussed included transit and international road passenger transport. Ministers agreed that the Commission's mandate to conduct transit negotiations with Austria and Switzerland should be extended indefinitely, with a view to obtaining further concessions. The Council approved in principle a draft transit agreement with Yugoslavia.

I reiterated the United Kingdom's strongly held view that concrete progress is needed on international road passenger transport; the matter will be further considered in the Committee of Permanent Representatives and I hope to be able to report progress as a result of the next Council.

A number of air transport issues were covered by the Council. There was a debate on which airlines should be included in the list of Community air cargo carriers, which forms an annex of the EC air cargo regulation. The Commission informed member states of its intention to have informal discussions with third countries on air cargo. On the question of state subsidies to the airline industry, a Commission report was promised in the near future, while the proposal on technical requirements in aviation was referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for further consideration and finalisation.

Moving on to the marine sector, agreement was reached on a revised presidency compromise on inland waterway cabotage, with a decision on derogations for the new German Länder. There was a disappointing lack of progress on maritime cabotage liberalisation despite the clear treaty obligation for liberalisation to be agreed, and implemented, as part of the completion of the single market. My hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic announced that the United Kingdom was withdrawing from the Loran C negotiations, partly because of the uncertainty of concluding an agreement within the time scale the United Kingdom had set for a proper transition, and partly because a more competitive offer has been received from the Racal electronics group to update its existing Decca system.

The Council adopted a directive on roadworthiness tests for cars which will help to ensure that vehicles throughout Europe are maintained to safe standards. A resolution on road safety, asking the Commission to draw up a report outlining a Community road safety strategy, which should include measures on vehicle standards and equipment, was also adopted. Agreement in principle was reached on the driving licences directive which will provide for mutual recognition of driving licences throughout the Community and harmonisation of driving test standards in member states. The directive will enter into force in 1996.

Some progress was made on the seat belts directive and the Committee of Permanent Representatives will consider it further with a view to a decision later this year.

Noise

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the further noise alleviation measures to which his hon. Friend, the Minister of State referred on 19 June, Official Report, column 348; and whether or not they included compensation.

Mr. Freeman: My reference was to measures mentioned in Kent county council's paper "International Rail Services Noise Protection" which suggests action that could be taken where railway noise increases and exceeds specific levels at certain times of day or night. The suggested action includes the provision of noise barriers or sound insulation for people's homes. It is these physical measures which British Rail will be discussing with the council.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by year for the last five years the number of justices of the peace in Doncaster by ward; and what steps have been taken over the last five years to increase the proportion of young justices of the peace, women justices of the peace, justices of the peace from ethnic minorities and justices of the peace from under-represented wards.

The Attorney-General: The present number of active justices of the peace in Doncaster by totalling the numbers for the wards in each parliamentary constituency is as follows:

	Number
Doncaster, Central	71
Don Valley	74
Doncaster, North	43

The figures for the last five years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and would not be likely to show any appreciable difference. Over the last five years the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee for Doncaster has continued, as required by the Lord Chancellor, to seek out men and women from all backgrounds and walks of life so that the bench broadly reflects the local community and is balanced in terms of age, sex, occupation and residence within the area.

The methods adopted by the committee towards achieving this aim have been by way of notices and articles in the local press, letters to all parish councils, major employers, political organisations, trade unions and magistrates on the active and supplemental list.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sardar Sarovar Dam

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of the Minister for Overseas Development on 12 June, Official Report, column 570, whether the independent team appointed to review the Narmada dam will include in its review consideration of proposals to (a) lower the height of the dam by 67 ft in order to reduce submersion and displacement by half and (b) resettlement and rehabilitation of 50,000 people displaced by irrigation channels in Gujarat, in addition to resettlement of oustees in Madyha Pradesh.

Mrs. Chalker: The World bank has informed us that the independent review team's terms of reference will not cover consideration of proposals to lower the height of the Sardar Sarovar dam. The team will consider all resettlement proposals. Bank staff estimate that the number of people affected by irrigation channels will be around 5,000 to 10,000.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether detailed plans have now been drawn up on how to provide drinking water for 10 million people from the Sardar Sarovar dam, funded by the World bank.

Mrs. Chalker: Detailed plans have been drawn up for the provision of drinking water for people in the existing townships nearest to the dam; detailed plans are being developed for people in areas further afield.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the proposed compensatory afforestation for the Narmada dam, funded by the World bank, (a) will ensure a continued source of non-timber forest products, as well as that the total number of trees is maintained, (b) will be located close to the areas where forest will be submerged and (c) will be located so as to minimise the effect of the loss of existing forest on the micro-climate in the area.

Mrs. Chalker: Several species of trees will be planted, including those which will provide non-forest products. The total number of trees will be maintained. Afforestation will be close to the areas where forest will be submerged. Trees will be located so as to minimise the effect on the micro-climate of the area.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Schools

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will increase the minimum teaching area in nursery schools to take account of the need to meet in full curricula, equipment and staffing needs.

Mr. Fallon: Minimum teaching areas in schools, including nursery schools, will be considered as part of the current review of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. The results of the review are likely to be available towards the end of next year.

Adult Education

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what has been the total capital and revenue expenditure on non-vocational and vocational adult education in each of the past five years by local education authority;

(2) what has been the adult education expenditure in England and Wales for the past five years by (1) local education authority, (2) vocational or non-vocational groupings and (3) age and gender.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many adult education services and facilities are free standing or absorbed into colleges of further education by local education authority.

Mr. Eggar: The following local education authorities in England made nil returns at November 1990 in respect of separate adult education centres outside FE colleges:

Enfield	Bolton	Sheffield
Harrow	Manchester	Bradford
Haringey	Salford	Hertfordshire
Newham	Tameside	Isle of Wight
Knowsley	Trafford	Shropshire
St. Helens	Doncaster	Wiltshire
Wirral	Rotherham

Data on the organisation of provision for adults in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

School Premises

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the responses made to the consultation exercise on the review of the 1981 School Premises Regulations.

Mr. Fallon: It is not the Department's practice to publish details of responses to such consultations. The views expressed will of course be given careful consideration and taken into account in the review.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the representations made since 1 April from local authorities seeking approval of expenditure on further education colleges and sixth-form colleges, the capital value of each scheme, and the institutions concerned; and whether, in any case, ministerial approval has been granted.

Mr. Eggar: The details are given in the table. In several cases, formal ministerial approval has not been needed for the action which the authority has been proposing to take. In other cases, while it has been possible to indicate our likely agreement, formal agreement has to await the details of the proposed contracts. I am unable to specify the values of the contracts concerned; to do so would be in breach of commercial information supplied in confidence.

Bacon's CTC

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what requirements have been put on the trustees of Bacon's city technology college about the money he has made available to them to build the city technology college should they decide not to proceed with the city technology college.

Mr. Eggar: Paragraph 24(A)iv of the CTC funding agreement requires the CTC on termination of the agreement to repay to the Secretary of State sums determined by reference to:

"(a) the value at that time of the College's site and premises and other assets held for the purposes of the College; and (b) the extent to which expenditure incurred in providing those assets was met by payments by the Secretary of State under this Agreement."

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will investigate the failure of the sponsors of Bacon's city technology college to offer all staff of Bacon's school security of appointment at the city technical college, as previously agreed between the school and the city technical college; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to contribute to the redundancy payments of staff of Bacon's school, when it closes on 31 August, who have not been offered equivalent employment at the new Bacon's city technology college or achieved employment elsewhere.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has been kept informed by the trustees of the Bacon's city technology college of progress towards the opening of the school, including issues of staffing. He is considering generally the question of liability of any redundancy payment.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw), Official Report, 9 May, columns 561-64, when the valuation of £1·5 million was made for the proceeds of the present site of Bacon's school; when the site will be put on the market; and what is the present estimate of the proceeds.

Mr. Eggar: The Bacon's school site was valued in 1989 at £1·5 million, following the advice of agents. The site will be marketed this autumn, with this figure as a guide price.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the new building for Bacon's city technology college will be available for occupation.

Mr. Eggar: The Bacon's CTC autumn term starts on 23 September, by which time most of the new building will be complete and available for occupation.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the cost of the chapel that has been built in the new Bacon's city technology college; and who has agreed to pay for it.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of the chapel, which is assessed at £140,000 will be met entirely by the Southwark diocesan board of education.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what role his appointee on the trustee of Bacon's city technology college has played in the appointment of staff at the new college.

Mr. Eggar: The Secretary of State's nominee on the Bacon's CTC trust has been directly involved only in the appointment of the principal of the college.

HEALTH

Maternity Units

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities have community maternity units; and how many places in these units each district health authority provides.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information relating to beds in wards designated for general practitioner—maternity use, is given in the table. Consultant obstetric wards also have beds available for use by general practitioners.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 593, to the hon. Member for Don Valley, if he will make it his practice to keep central records of national health service patients who have been discharged from hospital, and within three months required subsequent hospitalisation for the same or a different but related complaint.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no plans to do so. Patients may be re-admitted for a variety of reasons. Work carried out on using re-admission data to develop an outcome measure has encountered considerable difficulties in defining the necessary data and interpreting them.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Compensation)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on how much compensation, in out of court settlements, has been paid by each police authority for each of the last five years that figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Out-of-court settlements are made under section 48(2)(b) of the Police Act 1964 at the discretion of the police authority concerned; the information requested is not held centrally.

Assistant Commissioner Alun Wyn-Jones

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restitution or compensation has been made to Assistant Commissioner Alun Wyn-Jones following the decision that insufficient evidence for prosecution existed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the precise terms of the inquiry into the certain matters concerning Assistant Commissioner Alun Wyn-Jones.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The precise terms of reference of the inquiry which the acting Commissioner, with the agreement of my right hon. Friend, asked Mr. Nobes to conduct into Mr. Wyn-Jones's conduct were a matter for the acting Commissioner and not for my right hon. Friend.

Prison Discharge Grant

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received calling for the prison discharge grant to be increased to the equivalent of two weeks' payment.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received representations to this effect from the Association of Chief Officers of Probation.

Refugees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide capital and revenue support for more short-stay hostels for newly arrived refugees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government currently have many aspects of asylum-seeking under review, but have no present proposals on the matters raised in this question.

Satellite Television

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the proposed dedicated satellite television sex channel.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: If the proposed channel were to be uplinked from the United Kingdom, it would be subject to the licensing regime of the Independent Television Commission. This requires licensees to ensure, inter alia, that nothing is included in their programmes which offends against good taste or decency or is likely to be offensive to public feeling. If the service were to be uplinked from another European country, it would need to comply with international instruments which prohibit the broadcasting of pornographic programmes.

Vagrancy

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 27 February, Official Report, columns 502-4, if he will give the same information for prosecutions for vagrancy offences for (a) men and (b) women; and how many were convicted in each case.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the tables.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the average number of doses of drugs administered per inmate in each of Her Majesty's penal establishments in the latest available year.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overseas visitors were initially refused leave to enter and were removed from the United Kingdom (a) between January and April 1988 inclusive, (b) between January and April 1991 inclusive, (c) between January 1987 and December 1988 inclusive and (d) between January 1989 and December 1990 inclusive; and what were their nationalities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total numbers of passengers by nationality who were refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom in 1987, 1988 and 1989 are published in Table 1 of the annual Home Office Command Papers "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom"—Cm 415, 726 and 1124 for each year from 1987 to 1989 respectively—copies of which are held in the Library. Corresponding information for January to April 1988, year 1990, and January to April 1991 is given in the table. It is not possible from the information available centrally to ascertain how many of those refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom sought entry as visitors.

Jamaican Citizens

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Jamaican citizens were initially refused leave to enter the United Kingdom as not being genuine visitors (a) between January and April 1988 inclusive, (b) between January and April 1991 inclusive, (c) between January 1987 and December 1988 inclusive and (d) between January 1989 and December 1990 inclusive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available is given in the table.

[1] Persons refused under paragraph 22 of the immigration rules.
[2] Some may have sought entry as visitors but been refused for reasons other than not being a genuine visitor.

Electoral Procedures

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he holds as to which European Community countries use mechanical or electronic means to count votes at national elections.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our information, which may be incomplete, is that electronic ballot paper counting machines are used at Länder, federal, European Parliament and—probably—some local elections in Germany. We shall try to obtain further details, and I will write to my hon. Friend when we have done so.

Shops Reform

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those organisations which his Department is consulting about the reform of the Shops Act 1950; and when he expects these consultations to be concluded.

Mrs. Rumbold: To assist in the possible development of acceptable proposals for the reform of the law on Sunday trading, I have held or plan to hold separate discussions with representatives of the following organisations:

The Shopping Hours Reform Council; Sort Out Sunday; OPEN (Outlets Providing for Everyday Needs); the Keep Sunday Special Campaign; the Free Church Federal Council; the General Synod of the Church of England's Board for Social Responsibility; the Churches Main Committee; the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland; the Lord's Day Observation Society; Churches Together in England; the Board of British Jews; the National Consumer Council; the Retail Consortium; the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers; the GMB; the Association of District Councils; the Institute of Safety and Public Protection; the National Federation of Meat Traders; and the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board.

I have also met representatives of the Horticultural Trades Association in relation to a proposed private Member's Bill on Sunday trading sponsored on their behalf.

I hope to be able to conclude this programme of separate discussions in the early autumn. I am keeping open the possibility of joint discussions thereafter.

Maguire Case

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secrertary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Maguire case.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 12 July 1990, my predecessor referred to the Court of Appeal, under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968, the cases of Mr. and Mrs. Maguire, their sons, Vincent and Patrick, Mr. William Smyth and Mr. Patrick O'Neill. At the same time, he also sought the views of the Court of Appeal as to whether it was possible to refer to the court, under section 17(1)(a), the case of Mr. Patrick "Guiseppe' Conlon, who died in 1980. The court subsequently decided it could consider such a reference under section 17(1)(a), and the case was regarded as having been referred accordingly. My predecessor referred these cases in the light of the interim report of Sir John May who, on 19 October 1989, had been appointed by the Government to inquire into the circumstances leading to and deriving from the trial of the Maguire family and their co-defendants, as well as that of the Guildford Four.

The Court of Appeal has now quashed the convictions of all seven defendants for the unlawful possession of explosives. Under the provisions of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, any person whose conviction has been quashed on the basis of a new or newly discovered fact following a reference by the Home Secretary of the case to the Court of Appeal is entitled to apply for compensation. The amount will be decided on the basis of advice from an independent assessor. I will, of course, give careful consideration to any application that is made to me by the Maguire family and their co-defendants. In the case of Mr. Patrick "Guiseppe" Conlon, I will be prepared to consider an application from his family or other personal representative.

It is a matter of concern that there should have been such a serious miscarriage of justice in this case, which has resulted in the wrongful imprisonment of those involved. The Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, which I announced on 14 March, was established in part to ensure that, so far as possible, the likelihood of such events happening again would be minimised. The royal commission will be able to take this case into account during its deliberations. At the same time, I understand that Sir John May will continue to look into various aspects of the Maguires' case, and the Government will consider very carefully any further report by Sir John May.

Pet Shops

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to local authorities in establishing whether pet shop premises are suitable as respects (a) size, location, lighting, ventilation and cleanliness and (b) food and drink.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 24 June 1991]: None; under section 4(1) of the Pet Animals Act 1951, local authorities are able to authorise qualified veterinary surgeons to inspect licensed premises, if professional guidance is needed in a particular case, or more generally.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will indicate the type and extent of veterinary training given to environmental health officers for the purposes of carrying out their functions under the Pet Animals Act 1951.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 24 June 1991]: The training of environmental health officers in connection with any duties they may have under the Pet Animals Act 1951 is a matter for local authorities. As local authorities may appoint a veterinary surgeon to inspect licensed premises in their area or may seek veterinary advice subsequent to the inspection of premises by an official, there should be no difficulty in obtaining professional veterinary advice when necessary.

Flooding

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory requirements are in operation to provide advance public warning of flooding rivers, estuaries and inland waters; if he will list those places which have a standard advance public flood warning system in operation; what form these systems take; what funding is provided for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her on 26 June 1991.

SCOTLAND

Salmon

Mr. MacLennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the dumping of Norwegian salmon on the British market.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received representations from a number of hon. Members, and from salmon farming interests in Scotland, about the effect of Norwegian imports on the European Community market for farmed salmon, particularly the market in France.

The Government understand the industry's concerns and we are working closely with it to secure the future of the salmon farming industry in the United Kingdom.

Full-time Education

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of Scottish children between the ages of 16 and 18 years remain in full-time education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proportion of Scottish children between the ages of 16 and 18 years remaining in full-time education was 32·3 per cent. in 1989.

Footpaths and Bridleways

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 4 June, Official Report, column 201, if he will make it his practice to keep central records of the number of public footpaths and public bridleways that have been created or closed to the general public.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Each roads and planning authority, under the terms of its appropriate legislation, is responsible for the creation or closure of public footpaths and public bridleways in its area. There is no demonstrable benefit in my right hon. Friend compiling information of this type where he is not the authority responsible.

Scientific Units

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that a proportion of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and Scottish Natural Heritage scientific units are located in the highlands; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The location of scientific units for the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and subsequently Scottish Natural Heritage is a matter for the bodies themselves.

Polyscythaemia

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of polyscythaemia were diagnosed in Scotland in each of the past ten years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of in-patient cases treated for primary polyscythaemia in the period 1981-90 was as follows:

Year	[1]Cases
1981	224
1982	195
1983	193

1985	210

Special Schools

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to enable the Greater Glasgow health board to increase the provision of speech therapists and occupational therapists at special schools within Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 11 June I instigated a number of measures designed to meet the shortage of speech therapists and of therapy services for children with special educational needs.

These measures include a review of future demand, encouragement to qualified staff who are no longer in employment to return to work and a study to assess the feasibility of introducing in-service training courses for teachers to assist with the delivery of speech therapy treatment. Such courses would be supported by specific grant resources of 75 per cent. of the cost.

Greater Glasgow health board has already taken steps to increase its provision of speech and occupational therapists.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

15. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the government of the People's Republic of China about the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Hurd: During my visit to Peking in April, I discussed Hong Kong with senior Chinese leaders. A further round of official talks on Hong Kong's new airport took place in Peking on 18-22 May. The 19th plenary meeting of the Sino-British joint liaison group took place in Hong Kong on 11-13 June. There are also frequent contacts on diplomatic channels.

20. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit Hong Kong in the near future.

Mr. Hurd: I have no immediate plans to visit Hong Kong again.

Syria

16. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current British-Syrian relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Relations have been consolidated since the resumption of diplomatic ties last November. In that time I have visited Damascus twice—most recently this month—and the Syrian Foreign Minister has visited London. These contacts were useful. The Syrians were members of the coalition against Iraq. They have a major role in the peace process, in Gulf security and in Lebanon. They are also seeking to help over British hostages in Lebanon.

Poland

17. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Poland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to visit Poland. During the state visit of President Walesa in April, my right hon. Friend had discussions with the Polish Foreign Minister. I myself visited Poland in March this year.

The Gulf

18. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Kuwait and Southern Iraq were last discussed at the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Hurd: Since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, the Security Council has kept the situation between the two countries under constant review. It was last discussed during informal consultations of members of the Security Council on 11 June.

Cyprus

19. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to meet the leader of the Turkish Cypriots, Mr. Rauf Denktash.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to meet Mr. Denktash.

Middle East

21. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had about solving the outstanding problems in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is in regular touch with all the parties concerned on the outstanding middle east problems including the Arab-Israel dispute, Gulf security, regional disarmament and the situation in Iraq.

23. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for release of the British hostages in the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My visit to Lebanon and Syria was a further opportunity to work for the hostages' release. The Governments of both countries said they shared our determination to achieve their freedom. We are also in close touch with the Iranian Government, who have said that they will continue to use their influence to achieve the hostages' release. As I said after the visit, there are no conclusive signs of an immediate release, but the trends are encouraging.

35. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United States Secretary of State continues with our full support in his attempts to secure the agreement of all parties to the convening of a peace conference. There remain unresolved differences, mainly of a procedural nature. We have played our part in urging the parties to resolve these problems in order to allow the peace process to begin. We regard Israel's policy on settlements as a serious obstacle to this process.

36. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's contribution to finding a diplomatic and peaceful solution to the Palestinian-Israeli conflict acceptable to the international community.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have given our full support to the United States Secretary of State's initiative to restart the peace process. This offers the best hope of progress. We have urged the parties to the dispute to show the necessary flexibility. We are in close touch with the United States of America and our EC partners on the way forward. We remain concerned about the situation in the occupied territories in particular the continued establishment and expansion of settlements.

Japan (Prisoners of War)

22. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Japanese Prime Minister, at next month's G7 meeting in London, the question of compensation for second world war Japanese prisoners of war.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As I made clear in my reply to the Adjournment debate moved by my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) on 6 June, it is our view that the question of compensation was settled in the 1951 peace treaty.

Sierra Leone

24. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Sierra Leone about the security of its borders with Liberia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have had regular contacts with the Sierra Leone Government on this subject.

Following these discussions we have provided a package of non-lethal defence equipment to the Sierra Leone army.

South Africa

25. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress of reform in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We warmly welcome the historic steps taken this month by the South African Parliament to repeal the Population Registration Act, the Group Areas Act and the Land Acts, and thus to abolish the statutory pillars of apartheid.

NATO

27. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about the continuing role of NATO as the base of its members' security.

30. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the role of NATO in remaining as the basis of collective western security.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: NATO remains the essential basis of collective western defence, and for the North American military presence in Europe. Other institutions including the EC, the WEU and the CSCE have a role to play in European security. But NATO is the essential forum for consultation among the allies, and for agreement on policies bearing on the security and defence commitments of its members under the Washington treaty.

Israel

28. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Israel relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our relations with Israel are good, though differences remain on the peace process and on Israeli policies in the occupied territories, in particular the continued establishment and expansion of settlements. I had useful discussions with the Israeli Government in May when I visited Israel.

34. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Israeli Government concerning a peaceful long-term settlement in the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is in regular contact with the Israeli Foreign Minister. During my recent visit to Israel and the occupied territories, I had detailed discussions with leading Israelis and Palestinians on the peace process and urged them to show the flexibility necessary for Mr. Baker's initiative to succeed.

37. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any further plans to visit Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to visit Israel. I visited Israel on 6-9 May.

Ethiopia

29. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: The Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front took over Addis Ababa on 28 May and formed an interim administration. As agreed at the London talks chaired by the United States, a conference is due to be held by 1 July to establish a broadly based transitional government which it is hoped will prepare for free elections.

Soviet Union

31. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to hold a meeting with the Foreign Secretary of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend had a bilateral meeting with Mr. Bessmertnykh, the Soviet Foreign Minister, at the Council of CSCE Foreign Ministers in Berlin on 20 June. He has no plans for a further meeting, although Mr. Bessmertnykh has been invited to visit the United Kingdom later this year.

Lebanon

32. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a Minister from his Department last visited Lebanon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My visit to Lebanon from 9-12 June was the first by a British Minister since 1985. I had useful discussions with the President, the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister and other leaders. These addressed the situation in Lebanon and in the region. I was impressed by the determination of the Lebanese Government to restore its authority over the whole country. I was also able to stress the great importance we attach to the release of the hostages held in Lebanon.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Lebanese relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My visit to Lebanon from 9 to 12 June was the first by a British Minister since 1985. I had useful discussions with the President, Prime Minister, Foreign Minister and other leaders. These addressed the situation in Lebanon and in the region. I was impressed by the determination of the Lebanese Government to extend their authority over the whole country. I was also able to stress the great importance we attach to the release of the hostages.

European Political and Monetary Union

33. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest developments in the EPU-EMU inter-governmental negotiations.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The IGCs on EMU and political union have made good progress, but a number of problems remain to be resolved during the next months of negotiations before the shape of the final packages will become clear. I expect the European Council on 28-29 June to take stock of the negotiations so far.

Antarctica

38. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether international agreement has been reached on the future of Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The third session of the special consultative meeting of Antarctic treaty parties took place in Madrid from 17-23 June.

The parties reached agreement on much of the final text of an environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty, including annexes on marine pollution, waste disposal, environmental impact assessment and conservation of wildlife.

However, the United States has requested more time to consider the amendment procedure for the mining ban, and so a further meeting will be held before October, at which we hope that the protocol will be adopted.

European Council

39. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government intend to propose to the European Council of 28-29 June.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We look forward to discussion of the inter-governmental conferences, progress on the single market programme, and major international issues.

European Foreign Policy

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The European Council will consider the question of a common foreign and security policy in the course of its discussion on both inter-governmental conferences at its meeting in Luxembourg on 28-29 June.

Council of Europe (Social Development Fund)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards membership of the social development fund of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We take the view that our aid programme is best directed towards the poorest countries in Africa and Asia and elsewhere outside Europe, which have more pressing needs. If we were to subscribe to the fund we should have to divert our aid resources. This would result in a reduction in our contribution to bilateral and multilateral aid programmes, which neither we nor the other countries concerned in these programmes would favour.

Kashmir

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his reply of 12 June, Official Report, column 559, if he will take steps to ensure that human rights violations in Kashmir since 27 February are fully investigated and the subject of a further urgent joint European Community statement to the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of India are well aware of our concern that human rights must be respected. We have emphasised the importance of allowing independent investigations by human rights organisations and of being seen to bring wrongdoers to justice. We are confident that the Twelve will continue to monitor developments in Kashmir closely, and to reflect their concerns in further statements at the annual meetings of the UN Commission on Human Rights, and of the UN General Assembly.

Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had concerning the possible violation of the 1977 United Nations convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques —ENMOD—by the destruction of chemical and nuclear facilities in Iraq during the Gulf conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have had no such consultations. Throughout the conflict, the coalition forces were at pains to comply with the rules of international law, including the 1977 ENMOD convention which the United Kingdom has ratified and Iraq has not. This convention prohibits techniques devised to change—through the deliberate manipulation of natural processes—the dynamics, composition, or structure of the earth. There is no question that allied forces ever envisaged the use of such techniques. Moreover, allied attacks on chemical and nuclear facilities in Iraq were carefully planned to minimise the risk to the surrounding area.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is currently taking independently, and in collaboration with other nations, to prevent the persecution by the Hussein regime of the Shi-ite minority in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to give our full support to the deployment of UN relief workers and guards to the UN humanitarian centre in Basra. We have told the Iraquis that repression of the Shia population would have serious consequences. It would be a clear violation of Security Council resolution 688 and a matter for the Security Council's immediate consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Federation of Unions Supplying Electricity about the future of the electricity industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives from the Federation of Unions Supplying Electricity on 16 May to discuss their views on the planned privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity.

Waste Incineration

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the total cost of building the proposed incinerator at Maydown, County Londonderry; and what public funds will be made available for the project.

Mr. Needham: I understand that Du Pont estimates the total cost of building its proposed incinerator at Maydown as £38 million. The company has approached the Industrial Development Board for possible support for the project from public funds, but no final decision has yet been reached.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the safeguards which will have to be taken by the operator to prevent emissions from the proposed incinerator for hazardous wastes at Maydown, County Londonderry;

(2) if he will list the measures he intends to take to control the risk of emissions from the proposed incinerator at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: The proposed incinerator would constitute a registrable process under the Alkali and Radiochemical Works Regulation Act 1906 as amended by the Alkali and Radiochemical Works Order (Northern Ireland) 1991. Before operations commenced, a formal statement of best practical means would be issued in respect of this process by the alkali and radiochemical inspectorate of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. This statement would specify standards of emission and operational and process controls with respect to air pollution abatement. The inspectorate would insist that the operator used the best available technology to treat emissions before discharge to the atmosphere, to ensure there were no adverse health or amenity implications.

Acute Specialty Units

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many patients were treated in each year since 1989 in each of the acute specialty units at (a) Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, (b) Belfast City hospital, (c) Mater hospital, Belfast and (d) Ulster hospital;

(2) how many patients were treated in 1990 in each of the acute specialty units at (a) Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast, (b) Belfast City hospital, (c) Mater hospital, Belfast and (d) Ulster hospital.

Mr. Hanley: The table shows the number of discharges, including deaths, from acute specialties in each of the four hospitals in 1989 and 1990. Information is not available on the number of individual patients treated.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy for the future on double taxation of building societies.

Mr. Maude: There is no double taxation of building societies.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in making provisions for the repayment to building societies of tax paid under the transitional provisions of the Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Maude: It would not be appropriate to comment on the tax affairs of individual building societies.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Building Societies Association and the building societies on the repayments to building societies of tax paid under the transitional provisions of the Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Maude: Various representations have been received from the Building Societies Association and from some individual building societies.

Duty-Free Allowances

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of revenue forgone to the Treasury because of the sale of duty-free (a) alcoholic drinks, (b) tobacco products, (c) perfumery and (d) other taxable or dutiable products to travellers leaving the United Kingdom to (i) other European Community countries and (ii) elsewhere.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1991]: Reliable estimates cannot be provided because there is insufficient information on the amount of duty-free goods purchased by travellers leaving the United Kingdom.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits Guarantees

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the companies in the Dundee travel-to-work area in receipt of export credits guarantee assistance.

Mr. Sainsbury: The names of companies that receive export credits guarantee assistance are confidential for commercial reasons. I am, however, able to say that 31 companies in the area are customers of Export Credits Guarantee Department insurance services.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's performance in attracting internationally mobile inward investment projects in 1990-91.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau —IBB—announced in its annual report published today that 1990-91 saw a record for manufacturing and service sector for investment—and jobs—coming to the United Kingdom.

Between 1 April 1990 and 31 March 1991, 350 direct investment projects by foreign-owned companies into the United Kingdom were recorded by the IBB. Based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement, it is estimated that these projects will create or safeguard about 62,000 jobs.

Every one of these companies is expressing their belief in the underlying strength of the United Kingdom economy, and the climate of enterprise and initiative we have created here. Every one of them is endorsing the skills, productivity and trainability of our workforce. Every one of them is expressing a confidence in this country's future.

The figures are testament to some very hard and very effective work by the IBB itself, by Foreign and Commonwealth Office staff overseas, and by the territorial, regional and local authorities.

We all appreciate the jobs that foreign-owned companies have brought to the United Kingdom. But these companies bring more than just jobs. They bring strength to the economy. They also bring technology transfer. Five new Japanese R and D establishment set up in the United Kingdom last year. This brings the total number to 13. It is this kind of quality, long-term investment, associated with manufacturing, that is needed to see British science and industry in good stead into the next millenium.

I have asked the IBB to increase its efforts to attract R and D type investment, particularly covering the full range of integrated research, design and manufacturing.

They also bring huge gains in management skills transfer. That means being as good as the international competition in areas like total quality management, simultaneous engineering and "Just In time". It also means building long-term relationships with suppliers.

The IBB annual report is all about the long-term profitability and competitiveness of United Kingdom Incorporated. More overseas companies choose to invest here than anywhere in Europe. They do that for the very best reason—the United Kingdom is the place to do business.

I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

These totals exclude most retail and sales operations which are not the target for United Kingdom promotion.

Companies Act 1989

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to commence provisions of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: On Monday 24 June I signed an order which brings into operation certain provisions of the Act. The provisions in question are the powers to make regulations under section 35—section 35 concerns the establishment of a register of auditors—and the powers to make regulations under section 36—section 36 concerns information about audit firms which must be made available to the public. The regulations themselves will follow shortly.

I have placed a copy of the order in the Library.

Foreign Currency Exchange

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will seek powers to prevent users of foreign exchange currency businesses from being charged excessive commission on their transaction;

(2) if he will seek powers to prevent a double charge being levied on users of foreign exchange currency businesses through commission as well as marking up the value of the currency.

Mr. Leigh: Commission and other charges and exchange rates offered by foreign exchange currency businesses are best determined by competition in the market. However, the Government believe that for competition to be effective the customer should have adequate information concerning the exchange rates and commission charges that apply. I therefore propose to make regulations shortly under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which will set out requirements on how bureaux de change display their exchange rates and other charges.

ENVIRONMENT

Buxton Memorial (Restoration)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current state of the Buxton memorial in Victoria gardens, Palace of Westminster; and if he will consider action to restore it.

Mr. Yeo: The Buxton memorial has suffered from both vandalism and the effects of time. The statues near the base of the roof, the drinking bowls in the centre of the memorial and the centre stone structure are in particular need of repair.

The Department carries out a thorough cleaning and washing down of the memorial every quarter. It is working up a scheme for the necessary restoration of the memorial and funds have been allocated for the work to go ahead next year.

Trade in Wildlife

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris), Official Report, 9 May, column 550, if he will indicate when he intends to announce his decision arising from the forthcoming report on the trade in wild-taken plants and animals; and whether he will make the reports by the Royal Botanical Gardens and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee available to the public.

Mr. Baldry: We have asked our scientific advisers to submit their report by the end of July. We shall make an announcement as soon as possible thereafter. The report will be made available to the public.

Refugees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to provide additional resources to the housing corporations for housing associations catering for refugees.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have increased grant-in-aid to the Housing Corporation from £1·6 billion in 1991-92 to over £2 billion in 1993-94. This will increasingly be supplemented by private investment in housing association schemes.

Due to the massive resources that we plan to invest in the Housing Corporation over the next three years, the housing association movement can look forward to an expanding programme. Additional resources are not planned specifically for housing refugees.

Blackdown Hills

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is in a position to announce his decision on the Blackdown hills area of outstanding natural beauty designation order submitted to him by the Countryside Commission.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today confirmed the order that will designate the Blackdown hills as an area of outstanding natural beauty. The designation covers an area of 370 sq km on the borders of Somerset and Devon. The Blackdown hills are important for their natural beauty and unspoilt rural character which the designation will help to secure.

Water Charges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the implications for charging for water of the introduction of the council tax.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 June 1991]: Among the numerous representations we receive about future methods of charging for water, some advocate basing domestic water charges on the valuation bands which will be used for the proposed new council tax. Each company is free to decide its future system of charging provided it does not give undue preference to, or unduly discriminate against, any class or group of customers. The Director General of Water Services is considering responses to his consultation paper on alternative future methods of charging and will, I understand, be issuing guidelines later this year based on the results of the consultation.

Housing Estates, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sources and amounts of grant aid for the current financial year allocated to Buttershaw, Bierley and Woodside housing estates in Bradford, South; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 24 June 1991]: As part of its draft urban programme for 1991-92 Bradford metropolitan district council sought approval for two projects on these estates; £10,459 for a skills audit of Buttershaw estate and £22,154 for environmental works on Bierley estate. Both were approved. In addition, Bradford received a total housing investment programme allocation for 1991-92 of £13·37 million.

DEFENCE

Tornado

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on improvements to the Tornado F3 radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: Certain features of the second stage of the Foxhunter radar programme, together with other improvements, have already been introduced into those Tornado F3s deployed to the Gulf. We have now decided to add these improvements to the second stage of the radar programme, so that they can be extended to all Tornado F3 squadrons.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the Tornado F3 aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have decided not to proceed with the weapon system upgrade of the Tornado F3. We are confident that even without it the aircraft will continue to give effective service well into the next century. We anticipate that from the end of the present decade the European fighter aircraft will begin to complement the Tornado F3, thus providing a powerful reinforcement to the air defence capability of the Royal Air Force.

Officers

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the net reduction, actual and percentage, in serving officers in each rank (a) in the Royal Navy of captain and above, (b) in the Army of colonel and above and (c) in the Royal Air Force of wing commander and above since 1 July 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total number of officers, by rank, serving at 1 July 1990 and at 31 March 1991, together with the change in number and percentage change between the two dates, is set out in the table. These figures include augmented appointments to NATO.

Submarines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated cost of removal of a decommissioned nuclear submarine reactor compartment from the submarine;

(2) what is the annual estimated cost of storage afloat of each of the submarines HMS Conqueror, HMS Churchill and HMS Warspite;

(3) what has been the annual cost of storage afloat of the submarine HMS Dreadnought for each of the years it has been stored at Rosyth;

(4) what is the estimated cost of preparing each of the submarines HMS Conqueror, HMS Churchill and HMS Warspite for storing afloat.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is commercially confidential.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of preparing HMS Dreadnought for storage afloat.

Mr. Alan Clark: This work was carried out a number of years ago. The information requested, insofar as it may be available, could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Unexploded Ammunition

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by place and date the occasions on which buried unexploded ammunition has been found outside the impact or target areas of live firing ranges in the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information is not held in the form requested.

Magnetic Treatment Facility

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the magnetic treatment facility.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have decided not to proceed with the contract with Dowty Defence and Air Systems Ltd. for the design and construction of a magnetic treatment facility at Faslane. Recent design studies suggest that a more cost-effective and less environmentally obtrusive means of meeting the requirement should be available. The decision to cancel the contract in no way reflects on the standard of performance of the company or its subcontractors. It will not affect the programme for the deployment of the Trident submarine.

RAF Wildenrath and Gutersloh

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any United Kingdom dependants employed at RAF Wildenrath and RAF Gutersloh have been employed for more than two years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of 460 dependants are employed at RAF Wildenrath and RAF Gutersloh, of whom 82 have served more than two years.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to issue notices of dismissal to United Kingdom dependants employed at RAF Wildenrath and RAF Gutersloh.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Notices of dismissal will be issued to dependant employees at least two months prior to the dates on which their posts are no longer required. Wherever possible the dates of dismissal will be linked to the posting dates of spouses-parents. The first notices of dismissal are expected to be issued to some of the employees at RAF Wildenrath in January 1992.

Spare Parts

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 143, whether the level of spare parts required is determined by his Department or by NATO.

Mr. Alan Clark: Spares holdings are determined by MOD, although NATO guidance may be taken into account.

Rapid Reaction Force

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet made a decision on the size of the British contribution to the rapid reaction force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work to determine precise national contributions to NATO's future rapid reaction forces is continuing.

Residential Property

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the qualifying criteria for payment of injurious affection compensation referred to in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 3 June, Official Report, column 132.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The criteria are as follows:

1. Departmental approval to the introduction of a noise compensation scheme at the airfield.
2. Exposure of the individual dwelling to noise levels of at least 83dBLAeq 12 hours.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the qualifying criteria for the acquisition of dwellings referred to in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 3 June, Official Report, column 132.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The criteria are as follows:

1. Departmental approval to the introduction of a noise compensation scheme at the airfield.
2. New public works, for example, runway extension or strengthening, which, when brought into use, have physical effects; in these cases, noise.
3. The district valuer is satisfied that such effects have adversely affected property values.
4. The claimant's interest in the dwelling satisfies the qualifying conditions prescribed in the Land Compensation Act 1973, which the Ministry of Defence follows administratively.
5. The claim is submitted within the prescribed period.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Imported Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of imported birds which died during the period of quarantine and which were subsequently analysed by the veterinary investigations service for each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: The number of captive birds dying in quarantine or in transit and subsequently submitted to veterinary investigation centres for examination were as follows:

	Number
1987	4,268
1988	3,791
[1]1989-90	9,073
[1]1990-91	8,146

[1] April-March years.
Source: Veterinary Investigation Service.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will indicate the most common causes of death to imported wild birds (a) during transit and (b) during the 35-day quarantine period.

Mr. Maclean: The most common cause of death in imported captive birds is considered to be stress associated with malnutrition, dehydration, adverse environmental conditions and enteropathies. The other main specific causes of death recorded for the years 1987 to 1989 were salmonellosis, psittacosis, mycotic pneumonia and colisepticaemia.

Carcasses of imported birds are examined at veterinary investigation centres for evidence of infectious diseases which could spread to the national poultry flock, and the records do not differentiate between birds dying in transit or in quarantine.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has sought the advice of the Civil Aviation Authority concerning the transit of wild-caught birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has held discussions with representatives of the CAA concerning the preparation of guidance to airline operators on the transport of animals, including wild-caught birds. I have also written personally to the airlines emphasising my concern about this trade and stressing the need to observe the International Air Transport Association's rules on the carriage of animals.

I am concerned that all who are involved in any way with this trade should do everything possible to reduce the problems which have been shown to occur, particularly in relation to the mortality of certain species.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given to increase the existing 35-day period of quarantine for imported birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The 35-day period of post-import quarantine for imported birds provides the necessary level of protection against the introduction of Newcastle disease, avian influenza and other exotic avian diseases, and there is no scientific justification for extending this period.

Flood Warnings

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assistance is given by the Government for the provision of early flood warnings around the River Thames; what is the cost of providing warnings; what form such warnings take; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what statutory requirements are in operation to provide advance public warning of flooding around the United Kingdom coast; if he will list those places which have a standard advance public flood warning system in operation; what form these systems take; what funding is provided for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Under section 32 of the Land Drainage Act 1976 (as amended by paragraphs 1 and 14 of schedule 15 to the Water Act 1989), the National Rivers Authority (NRA) is empowered to provide and operate flood warning systems in England and Wales.

Under section 92 of the 1976 Act (as amended by schedule 17 to the Local Government Act 1985 and by paragraph 1 of schedule 15 to the Water Act 1989) my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is empowered to make grants to the NRA towards the cost of flood warning systems. In the 1990-91 financial year these grant payments totalled about £55,000.

The authority has made arrangements for flood forecasting and warning covering both river and coastal areas. Weather forecasts, weather radar, rainfall and tidal levels are monitored in order to detect possible flooding incidents. Information about possible surge tides from the storm tide warning service based at the meteorological office, Bracknell is also used in assessing the risk of coastal flooding.

This Department is responsible for funding the storm tide warning service, and in the 1990-91 financial year about £400,000 was spent on this service, which produces primary warnings based on estimates of surge tides at a series of specific reference ports. Detailed warnings for vulnerable points along the coast are given by the NRA drawing on expert knowledge of local conditions to interpret the information from the storm tide warning service.

The NRA issues flood warning notices to the police who are responsible for deciding when the public should be warned, and local contingency plans for flooding will, if necessary, be initiated. These plans which are worked out by the NRA in conjunction with the police, local authority emergency planning officers, port authorities and others, cover the form that warnings will take (eg sirens, announcements on local radio, etc.).

The River Thames area is covered by the arrangements outlined above. Surge forecasts are particularly useful in assessing when the Thames barrier should be closed to prevent possible flooding of London from the sea but the cost is not recorded separately by the Department.

Nor do we have any information on the overall costs of providing public flood warnings.

Separate arrangements apply in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Bananas

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to ensure that preferential arrangements remain after 1992 to maintain the current United Kingdom-Caribbean trade in bananas.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 19 June 1991, at columns 194-95.

Dioxins in Milk

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies are being carried out on the levels of dioxins in milk.

Mr. Gummer: Over the last year my Department has been carrying out a general surveillance programme for dioxins in food in a range of urban and rural areas. The results, which relate to milk collected at farms, wholesale and retail stages, will be presented to the study group on the chemical aspects of food surveillance later this year and scrutinised by independent expert committees. They will then be published in the usual way together with the committees' recommendations.

Sophisticated techniques which have been developed recently in the Department's food science laboratory at Norwich have for the last year made it possible to detect dioxins at minute levels. As milk tends to show up airborne contaminants, it is a particularly useful and sensitive product to test in a programme designed to protect the public. Dioxins are of course widespread in the environment, and as could be expected, traces of them have been found in all the samples tested. Last year an international meeting under the auspices of the World Heath Organisation European region recommended a tolerable daily intake for dioxins of 0·01 nanogrammes per kilogram body weight per day. From this, scientific and medical experts in this Department and the Department of Health have calculated a maximum tolerable concentration of 0·7 nanogrames per kilogram of milk, if the tolerable daily intake is not to be exceeded. Their advice is that action should be taken to prevent the direct consumption of milk if it contains a higher concentration of dioxins.

Samples have been taken at three stages, at the retail outlets, at the dairies, and on the farm. At the retail stage, no sample contained more than the normal background levels of dioxin and there is no risk to consumers. At the dairy stage the same applies: this provides further reassurance. Similarly most of the samples taken on farms do not reveal anything unusual.

However, on two farms in the Bolsover area of Derbyshire the levels were greater than the threshold set by this Department and the Department of Health. An extended survey has however indicated lower levels on all the other dairy farms in the vicinity. I am making the results available in the Library of the House. As to these two farms, milk sold is bulked with other milk in the milk tanker and at the dairy. Tests on milk from the dairy have shown normal background levels. Nevertheless it is best that milk from these farms not be mixed with other milk.

My officials have today visited the farmers concerned and we have told them and the milk marketing board about these results. The milk marketing board has concluded that the milk does not meet the conditions in its standard terms of sale for producers and it will not accept the milk into the food supply. I welcome this prompt action, which shows that the board is determined to uphold the highest quality standards.

At the same time, we cannot ignore the farmers whose livelihood has been milk production. There is no reason to think that they are in any way at fault and I have every sympathy with their predicament. My staff will give advice on the business and husbandry options that are open to them.

This Department will continue to carry out surveillance in the area and will undertake further detailed studies to learn more about the mechanism for the transmission of dioxins. I am determined that through our surveillance of the food supply we should ensure that fullest possible protection of the public.

Sea Fisheries Committees

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to change his proposals for the possible extension of SFC jurisdiction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Yes. Following detailed consultations with all interested parties and after consideration of the views expressed, the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided that, in order to enable sea fisheries committees to regulate those stocks, notably shellfish, which are predominantly fished within 0 to 6 mile belt, we are in principle ready to see the jurisdiction of SFCs extended to include waters out to six miles from United Kingdom baselines. It is now for SFCs and the constituent Councils to decide whether to seek extension of their jurisdiction.

If an SFC's jurisdiction is extended, its existing byelaws will continue to apply only within the 0 to 3 mile belt. Any new byelaws intended to apply in the 3-6 mile belt will be considered on their merits in the usual way.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Ibbs Report

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what progress is being made with implementing the Ibbs report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: Following the generally favourable response of hon. Members in the "take note" debate in the House on 17 January, Official Report, columns 1046-84, the Commission has been making progress towards implementing the main recommendations in accordance, so far as possible, with the timetable proposed in Sir Robin Ibbs's report "House of Commons Services"—HC 38. Competitions for the new posts of Director of Finance and Administration, and Director of Works, have been organised with the assistance of appropriate management consultants. The new Director of Finance and Administration, Mr. James Rodda, currently director of finance and administration at the London Futures and Options Exchange, will assume the headship of the renamed Finance and Administration Department on Monday 1 July. The appointment of a new Director of Works within the Departmnent of the Serjeant at Arms will be announced shortly.

Negotiations are in train for the transfer to the Commission of responsibility for the cost of printing, stationery and office supplies, currently accounted for by HMSO—class XVIII, vote 17; and for the Commons component of the parliamentary works budget, currently accounted for by the Department of the Environment—class VIII, vote 7. An announcement of the likely date of transfer of formal vote responsibility for these and other activities will be made in due course.

Discussions are also in train to draw up appropriate draft standing orders for the new Select Committees which the Ibbs report proposes should replace the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services), and new terms of reference for the Board of Management. I understand that the authorities of the House of Lords are adapting their own procedures and administrative arrangements to keep in line with the implementation of the Ibbs report programme in this House. Other consequences of the recommendations in the Ibbs report are being implemented by the Commission as speedily as possible, although full account is being taken at every stage of the views and interests of other bodies and individuals concerned.

ENVIRONMENT

Performance Indicators

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance indicators are published for his Department; and what steps his Department has taken to involve consumer views in the development of performance indicators.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my Department's annual report 1991—Cm. 1508—which provides an explanation of my Department's expenditure plans, including measures of past and expected outputs and performance. Further details are also available from MINIS documents in the Library of the House; the latest MINIS returns—MINIS 12—will be published shortly.

Last year 27,900 people and organisations were interviewed or consulted at a cost of £2·3 million in pursuit of the Department finding out more about the effects of its policies and programmes. Each year my Department publishes the results of its findings and distributes the reports widely. The Department also encourages its sponsored bodies and local authorities to take account of the views of consumers and other interested parties in developing performance indicators for the services which are delivered through them, rather than by the Department directly. For example, we have recently commissioned the development of a manual for local authorities and housing associations on conducting tenant surveys.

Chromium Compounds

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the dangers to public health of airborne emissions of chromium compounds; and what measures are taken to monitor industrial sites which are known to emit such substances.

Mr. Trippier: Information on dangers to public health of airborne emissions of chromium compounds is a matter primarily for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

New processes for the production of chromium, its alloys and compounds require an authorisation from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, under part I of the Environmental Protection Act. The authorisation will include monitoring requirements of the operator to demonstrate compliance with the release limits commensurate with the use of the "best available techniques not entailing excessive cost".

However, existing chromium works subject to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act are required to demonstrate the use of the "best practical means" and this may include the specific requirement to monitor emissions of chromium and its compounds. These works will come under the requirements of part I of the Environmental Protection Act from 1 May 1994.

Clyde Submarine Base

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many supervising officers' instructions at the Trident construction project at the Clyde submarine base have been issued at nil value; and what percentage of instructions on average come into this category;

(2) what budgetary value is attributed to supervising officers' instructions to contractors and sub-contractors relating to work at the Clyde submarine base.

Mr. Yeo: Our contractual arrangements at the Clyde submarine base development are commercially confidenial.

Planning Appeals

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the statement of 2 May, Official Report, columns 273-74 by the Minister for Housing and Planning, if he will give the success rate of planning appeals in England divided into small sites of two acres or less not involving conservation areas or listed buildings, larger sites of the same type, proposals in conservation areas, proposals involving listed buildings not in conservation areas and appeals against enforcement notices.

Sir George Young: The information relating to appeals against enforcement notices is as follows:

	Number	Per cent.
Appeals decided	2,808	—
Notice upheld	1,893	67
Notice varied	81	3
Notice quashed	854	30

The other information requested is not available in the form required.

Concert Hall, Manchester

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what public funding has been put towards the financing of the proposed international concert hall, Manchester.

Mr. Portillo: The public funding put towards the financing of the proposed international concert hall, Manchester, has amounted to £311,500 to date for a number of feasibility studies.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require all contracts which involve the importation of waste into the United Kingdom to include a clause which will require the waste to be returned to the exporter if it is found to be different in nature, content or toxicity from that described in the contract.

Mr. Trippier: One provision of the Basle convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous waste and their disposal is that, where the fault lies with him, the exporter or generator must take back his waste where it does not conform in a material way with the documents including the contract. The European Community has considerable competence in respect of transboundary movements of hazardous waste and the United Kingdom is pressing the EC to adopt a regulation to implement the convention. The regulation will necessarily include provision for the return of waste in the circumstances described.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of money saved in community charge reduction scheme payments due to the £140 reduction in headline bills; what is the likely cost of the reduction scheme in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of the reduction scheme announced in January was £1·7 billion. Following the Budget changes, my best estimate of the cost of the reduction scheme is £1·25 billion.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to publish regulations relating to the Local Government Finance and Valuation Bill on either (a) capping or (b) valuation before the end of July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We intend to publish as soon as practicable regulations to enable us to make an early start on the exercise of allocating domestic properties into bands.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid in 1990-91 in poll tax transitional relief.

Mr. Portillo: Local authorities have not yet submitted final claims for grant in respect of transitional relief awarded, but to date they have claimed £260 million.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the administrative costs of administering (a) poll tax transitional relief in 1990-91 and (b) the community charge reduction scheme in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: A total of £19 million was paid to local authorities last year to reimburse them for the cost of operating the transitional relief scheme. This year local authorities will receive a further £15 million to cover the costs of preparing for and administering the reduction scheme.

Pollution Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the recent study by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's environment directorate on pollution insurance and compensation funds for accidental pollution in regard to its relevance for United Kingdom legislation.

Mr. Trippier: I have made no response to the publication of the report. It will of course be studied by officials and any material relevant to United Kingdom legislation will be noted.

National Association for Environmental Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings he has had with representatives of the National Association for Environmental Education since 1987; and when he next expects to meet representatives of the association.

Mr. Trippier: There have been no recent meetings between Ministers and the National Association for Environmental Education although officials maintain regular contact. I am planning to attend the association's annual conference in April next year.

EC Construction Products Directive

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to implement the provisions of the EC construction products directive in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend intends to implement the EC construction products directive — 89/106/EEC—by means of regulations made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. These regulations are to be laid in Parliament around the middle of July and it is proposed that they come into force around the turn of the year.

Implementation of the directive in the United Kingdom will take place somewhat later than the target timetable set out in the directive—27 June 1991. However, our implementation timetable is entirely consistent with the European Commission's projected date for the publication of interpretative documents. These documents are essential to the commercial application of the directive and to effective enforcement action.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress was made by the parties to the Montreal protocol at their third meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The third meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer took place in Nairobi from 19 to 21 June. Good progress was made in setting stronger mandates for the protocol's technological and economic assessment panels to consider the implications for a 1997 phase-out of substances that deplete the ozone layer, and to review the control measures agreed at the London meeting in 1990.

The United Kingdom will play a leading role in the work of the working groups set up under the Montreal protocol to examine and recommend further changes to the protocol when it is reviewed next year at the fourth meeting of the parties.

More than 70 countries are now parties to the protocol. The meeting welcomed the announcement from China that it would accede to the protocol. The parties also agreed to increase the size of the interim multilateral fund established one year ago at the London meeting to $200 million, and approved over $9 million of projects to be undertaken in 1991 by the World bank, United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme to support developing countries to phase out their use of ozone-depleting substances.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will put into private ownership the Fenchurch Street to Southend line; if he will allow competing operators to run trains for passengers on the line; and if he will allow season ticket holders to buy shares in the lines;

(2) if he will make it his policy to privatise designated British Rail lines on an experimental basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Our policy is to privatise British Rail. We are considering how that can best be done. We propose to provide for a right of access to British Rail's track for new operators, although this will require legislation.

Bus Drivers

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute an inquiry into the hours worked by drivers employed by private bus companies in the Greater London area.

Mr. Freeman: No. The hours worked by bus drivers in the Greater London area, as elsewhere, are governed by rules contained in part VI of the Transport Act 1968 and EC directive 3820/85.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will construct a table showing, for each police authority, what the total accumulated bid was for increases in establishment between 1979 and the latest available date; what total increases in establishment have been awarded in each case; and what percentage the total increases represent as a proportion of the total accumulated bids.

Metropolitan[2]	—	2,126	—

[1] The establishment of the City of London Police was reduced in 1983-84 and therefore a percentage of posts approved from posts applied for cannot be shown.

[2] The Home Secretary is himself police authority for the Metropolitan Police. The table shows therefore only the extra posts awarded.

Chief Superintendent Colin McMurray

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the original terms of the disciplinary inquiry into the alleged activities of Chief Superintendent Colin McMurray.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Police (Accusations)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what channels exist for senior police officers to vindicate themselves following false accusations being brought against them.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Where a senior officer has been the subject of a false allegation by a member of the public, it is open to him, as it is to anyone else, to bring a civil action against that person.

Braille Voting Cards

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide Braille voting cards at polling stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The Representation of the People Acts and subordinate legislation already allow the presiding officer or a companion to assist blind people to vote. Alternatively, they may choose to vote by post or by proxy.

Police Officers (Call-out)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information is available to him on the numbers of police officers available for call-out for each police force; what is the figure for each force during (a) daytime and (b) night time; and what proportion of the total force strength this represents;

(2) what information is available to his Department on the call-out response times by individual police forces; if he will give the average figure for (a) daytime and (b) night time, together with the 10 highest and 10 lowest figures; and what are the comparable figures for call-out to business and retail premises (i) in the high street and (ii) in out-of-town shopping centres.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not held centrally.

TV Licensing Enforcement

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sanctions are available to him to ensure that details of television purchases provided to the BBC for licensing enforcement are not used for commercial purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under section 180 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, responsibility for the issue and renewal of television licences passed to the BBC on 1 April 1991. The right to use the records existing before 1 April for television licensing purposes was transferred to the corporation by deed of gift laid before the House on 8 March. Its use of those records for any other purposes would need my prior approval. However, subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984, it is for the BBC to decide what use to make of the records created since it became the statutory licensing authority.

Swear Belts

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ban the sale of swear belts to minors.

Mr. John Patten: Legislation on the supply, display, importation or use of obscene or indecent material may apply to tape devices which replay foul language. The law should operate on the language used rather than the instruments for reproducing it. As well as the criminal law, we need the exercise of responsibility by parents and families in influencing minors.

Mr. Samuel Antonelli

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the activities of Samuel Thomas Antonelli, a United States citizen convicted on four counts of harassment at Warrington magistrates court on 5 March; and what steps he intends to take in the matter.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 25 June 1991]: None, although I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has received a number of representations about Mr. Antonelli and his company. Mr. Antonelli has appealed to the Crown court against his conviction, and I can make no comment about those proceedings.

Mr. Mohinder Paul Singh Bedi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the current position concerning police inquiries into the affairs of Mr. Mohinder Paul Singh Bedi.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 25 June 1991]: I understand that the investigation by the Metropolitan police into the affairs of Mohinder Paul Singh Bedi is continuing. Charges of conspiracy to defraud have now been brought against Mr. Bedi.

WALES

Right to Buy

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the source of the information he gave in his answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) of 7 June, Official Report, column 369, regarding outstanding right-to-buy applications.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information came from a Welsh Office statistical return (WHO7) which is completed by each local authority on a quarterly basis. The return asks, among other things, for the number of "accepted Right-to-Buy applications being dealt with but not yet completed at end of quarter".

The data from this part of the return formed the basis of my recent answer.

The return, together with other housing statistical returns, was reviewed in consultation with local authority representatives last year.

Youth Training

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many youth training scheme places have been made available in Wales in the area of agricultural and rural skills training during each of the last 10 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There were 730 YT places in agricultural skills filled at 30 March 1991. Information relating to earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many youth opportunities programme, youth training scheme and youth training places were available in Wales in each year since 1978; and what is the estimate for 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

EC Funding

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently being made by his Department to ensure the maximum possible level of funding from the European Community structures directives to objective 5b status areas of Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The integrated development operations programme—IDO—for Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys, under objective 5b of the EC's structural funds, was formally approved by the Commission on 14 May this year. The European regional development fund—ERDF—element of the IDO was already operating as a national programme of community interest, and some £67·4 million in ERDF grants has been allocated to projects in the three counties, out of a programme allocation of £79·3 million for 1987-91. Approval to the IDO means that European social fund projects can also be supported, and the allocation of £1·8 million for 1990 has already been committed to projects. A further IDO programme for 1992-93, to take up funds already committed to Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys, will shortly be submitted to the Commission.

Planning Procedures

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the success rate of planning appeals in Wales, overall and divided into: small sites of two acres or less not involving conservation areas or listed buildings, larger sites of the same type, proposals in conservation areas, proposals involving listed buildings not in conservation areas and appeals against enforcement notices.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In Wales 33·8 per cent. of planning appeals were allowed in the financial year 1990-91. In the same period 31 per cent. of appeals against enforcement notices were allowed. Information is not kept in such a way as to provide the other figures requested.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the results of his review on planning guidance in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Assembly of Welsh Counties —AWC—has accepted my right hon. Friend's invitation to assess, in collaboration with other bodies, the existing strategic planning framework which provides the policy context for the preparation of structure plans and local plans in Wales. We expect to receive advice from the AWC early in 1992. We will then consider the need to revise or update the policy framework.

Sheep (Attacks by Dogs)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of attacks on sheep by dogs have been recorded in each police authority area in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many sheep have been (i) killed or (ii) injured in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally.

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many agricultural tenancies have been granted to people under the age of 30 years in Wales in each year since 1978; and what has been the ratio of applications to available lettings in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of the uniform business rate on businesses in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Unified business rates remove uncertainty in financial planning for businesses by limiting year-on-year increases to no more than the retail prices index, equalise rates on similar properties in different locations, and avoid unreasonable levels of rates imposed by some local authorities under the old system.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Advisers

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister how many members of the Cabinet have a special adviser.

The Prime Minister: Seventeen.

Medicinal Products

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are made to provide the Department of Trade and Industry with briefing from the Department of Health on the issue of supplementary protection certificates for medicinal products.

The Prime Minister: There is close co-operation and regular contact between the two Departments, to ensure that health care, industrial and intellectual property issues are reflected in the Government's approach to the Commission's proposal.

Farmed Salmon

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministry is responsible for negotiating with the European Commission concerning the dumping of farmed salmon.

The Prime Minister: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department are together representing the current concerns of the United Kingdom's fish farming industry with Norwegian imports to the European Commission. In the event of a formal anti-dumping complaint being made by the industry, the Department of Trade and Industry working in close co-operation with other relevant Departments would represent the United Kingdom interest in Brussels in view of its overall responsibility for anti-dumping matters.

Strategic Arms Reduction

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on the inclusion of the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent in strategic arms reduction talks with the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister: The current strategic arms reduction talks are bilateral between the United States and the Soviet Union; British nuclear forces will not therefore be included in the agreement. If United States and Soviet strategic arsenals were further reduced substantially, and if there had been no significant improvements in defensive capabilities, we would consider how best we might contribute to the arms control process in the light of the changed circumstances. But the introduction of Trident in the mid-1990s will provide the minimum capability necessary to maintain an effective independent deterrent into the next century and the reductions in prospect would not reduce our strategic needs.

Indonesian Research Minister

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with the Indonesian Research Minister on 19 June.

The Prime Minister: I met Dr. Habibie, the Indonesian Minister for Research and Technology, on 19 June. We discussed a number of issues including commercial co-operation, particularly in the aerospace sector, and the arrangements for Indonesians to study in Britain.

European Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he expects to put to the meeting of the European Council in Luxembourg.

The Prime Minister: I shall make clear the United Kingdom objective of creating an open, liberal and efficient Community. We want to improve foreign policy co-ordination, but the basis of our security in Europe must continue to be the Atlantic alliance. In order to allow European co-operation to prosper, we need a flexible treaty structure distinguishing between Community and intergovernmental activity. We also want the European Council to give fresh impetus to the single market programme. We shall discuss a range of international issues, including the crisis in Yugoslavia.

President Mitterrand

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what matters were discussed during his meeting with President Mitterrand on 24 June.

The Prime Minister: The talks at the annual Anglo-French summit in Dunkirk on 24 June concentrated on the two intergovernmental conferences and the forthcoming Luxembourg European Council; European security and defence questions; and the situation in Iraq. The talks were fruitful and timely. President Mitterrand and I agreed to meet again on 29 July in Calais on the fourth anniversary of the ratification of the channel tunnel treaty.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 27 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall depart for Luxembourg for the European Council meeting tomorrow.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maintained Schools

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list the total number of persons employed as (a) teachers, (b) skilled ancillary staff and (c) unskilled or semi-skilled staff in (i) controlled schools, (ii) schools under the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools and (iii) other maintained schools, indicating in respect of each figure the number of persons whose perceived religious affiliation is Protestant and Roman Catholic.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Housing, Dungannon and Fermanagh

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many private sector new-build planning permissions have been (a) approved and (b) refused in each year since 1986 in rural areas within (i) Dungannon and (ii) Fermanagh district council area.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

	Approved		Refused
	Dungannon	Fermanagh	Dungannon	Fermanagh
1985-86	137	235	22	11
1986-87	177	235	29	32
1987-88	165	230	30	37
1988-89	167	224	28	28
1989-90	145	215	25	33
1990-91	131	219	41	38

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the (a) percentage and (b) number of unfit houses in private ownership in the rural areas of (i) Dungannon and (ii) Fermanagh district council areas according to Northern Ireland Housing Executive statistics.

Mr. Needham: The chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that the information requested is not available separately for the Dungannon and Fermanagh district council areas. However the executive's 1987 house condition survey indicated that, taking these two areas together, some 27 per cent.—4,340—privately owned dwellings were unfit.

Farming

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people earn their living entirely from farming in the constituency of Fermanagh and South Tyrone; and if he will indicate the trend since 1972 and projected likely trends till the year 2000.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available. Information from the June 1990 farm census indicates that 10,300 persons in the constituency worked on farms, either as farmers, family or hired labour. Of this number 5,000 indicated that they worked full time in agriculture. Comparable data are not available for earlier years.

Human Rights Report

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received the 16th report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The report, for the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991, has been published today and copies have been laid before Parliament.

The report covers a wide range of matters that the commission has considered during the period under review. These include emergency legislation, education, fair employment, the law relating to children, peremptory challenge in the selection of jurors, silence as corroboration and prisoners' rights.

I value the advice the commission gives me and appreciate the work it does in considering a wide range of human rights matters. The commission has undertaken another extensive programme of work and I am grateful for the continued commitment shown by its members.

Copies of my response to the commission's 16th report and of the report itself have been placed in the Library.

Life Sentences

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of (a) policemen, (b) prison officers, (c) regular Army soldiers and (d) the Ulster Defence Regiment have been released on licence in each of the last 10 years, indicating, in each case, the number of years actually served in prison.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 June 1991]: The information is as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the meeting of the Agriculture Council on 21 and 22 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to the reply, 3 June 1991, c. 38]: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

Agreement was reached in principle on instruments concerning health rules for the marketing of molluscs and of fishery products, veterinary checks on animals entering the Community from third countries, health conditions for trade in poultrymeat and safety standards for the use of pesticides on plants. In addition significant progress was made on a draft regulation on health rules for the marketing of fresh meat. All these constitute useful and significant steps towards the establishment of the single market.

The Council had a first discussion of two proposals on food quality. I made it clear that the United Kingdom had serious doubts as to the usefulness of these proposals; and that major changes would be needed if they were to secure our support.

I made it clear that the United Kingdom expected satisfactory arrangements to be introduced to protect Community (notably Scottish) producers of soft fruit from exceptionally low-priced imports from eastern Europe when the present special controls expire on 31 July.

ENERGY

Fissile Material

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the International Atomic Energy Authority with respect to monitoring the use made in civil nuclear programmes of fissile materials produced originally for military purposes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All civil nuclear material in the United Kingdom, whatever its origin, is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the IAEA-UK-Euratom safeguards agreement—INFCIRC-263.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether fissile material produced for military purposes in the United Kingdom is suitable for civil purposes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes, in principle.

Plutonium Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much plutonium has been exported to the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic in each of the past two years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There have been no exports of plutonium in quantities of a few grammes or more to the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic from the United Kingdom during the past two years.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Chittagong Hill Tracts

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been granted to refugees from the Chittagong hill tracts who have sought sanctuary in Tripura, India; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No request for United Kingdom bilateral assistance has been received from either of the Governments concerned. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has been unable to gain access and is also therefore unable to assist.

Project Costs

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the average agreed ceiling for local cost aid, and the percentage of bilateral aid actually given for local costs, as a percentage of project aid and a percentage of total bilateral aid, in Africa and Asia, in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 19 June 1991]: Since 1990 there have no longer been any limits on the extent to which our financial aid to least-developed countries can be used to meet local costs. For other countries, local cost ceilings are established on a country or project basis; data on the level of these ceilings are not available in an aggregated form. The percentage figures for actual local cost aid are as follows:

	Africa		Asia
	Local costs as percentage of project aid (excluding ATP)	Local costs as percentage of total bilateral aid	Local costs as percentage of project aid (excluding ATP)	Local costs as percentage of total bilateral aid

Note: Local costs figures are not available by region before 1981.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Residential Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a further breakdown of the figures given in the answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 350, to differentiate between claimants in residential and in nursing homes.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest estimate of the number of people in receipt of income support in residential care and nursing homes is for August 1990, when the figure was 128,000 and 71,000 respectively. Information on how many of these were over pension age is not available, but, as of May 1989, about 73 per cent. of income support recipients in residential care and 88 per cent. in nursing homes were over pension age.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the practice of his Department's offices and agencies of referring clients to local citizens advice bureaux; what evidence he has of any increase in this practice; and if he will make a statement on the responsibility of his Department's offices and agencies to assist clients with their inquiries.

Miss Widdecombe: Neither the Department nor its agencies routinely refer customers to citizens advice bureaux: the provision of information and help on social security matters is, properly, a function of the Department and its agencies. However, customers may be told about the bureaux and other voluntary organisations where, for example, the problem lies outside the Department's area or where benefit is refused and help with an appeal is sought.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1991-92 of increasing the basic retirement pension by £5 per week for a single pensioner and £8 a week for a married couple, assuming similar increases in linked benefits and in income-related benefits for pensioners, giving figures (a) gross and (b) net of tax revenues and savings in other benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: The gross cost would be £3·1 billion. Net of income tax, the figure would be £2·9 billion. If those in receipt of a linked benefit but not the pensioner premium did not receive a similar increase in their income-related benefit, the net cost would fall to £2·8 billion.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost, net of savings in tax, of uprating the retirement pension, income support pension premium and housing benefit pensioner premium by £5 per week for single pensioners and £8 per week for pensioner couples in 1991-92; and if he will set out for linked benefits the cost in 1991-92 that would arise from these changes.

Miss Widdecombe: The gross cost of increasing these and the linked contributory benefits by £5 for a single pensioner and £8 for a pensioner couple is £3·1 billion. The cost, net of tax, would be £2·9 billion; this includes £0·5 billion to increase the linked benefits.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which benefits have a statutory requirement to link (a) the level of benefit to the retirement pension level and (b) the level of increase at uprating to the same level of increase for retirement pension.

Miss Widdecombe: The following benefits are paid at rates which are linked by statute to that of the retirement pension: widow's pension, widowed mother's allowance and invalidity benefit. Unemployment benefit and sickness benefit are also linked for certain categories of recipient over pensionable age. The Secretary of State has a statutory duty to review the value of the category A retirement pension on an annual basis and increase it if appropriate; if the pension rate is increased the level of the above benefits will be raised also.

Household Incomes

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update to 1988 the tables on real rises in household incomes since 1979, provided in his reply of 26 July 1990 to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) Official Report, columns 501-2.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the amount of the reduction in community charge benefit payments in 1991-92 due to the £140 reduction in headline bills.

Miss Widdecombe: The reduction is about £850 million.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost to his Department in 1991-92 of abolishing the poll tax 20 per cent. contribution rule.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest estimate is that the total cost in 1991-92 of awarding 100 per cent. maximum community charge benefit would be £440 million at current benefit levels. Such a change would affect all people receiving community charge benefit including those people on income support and equivalent incomes. This estimate assumes that no reductions are made in the income-related benefit levels which were adjusted in April 1989, to include help towards the 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge, at an estimated cost of £500 million.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much will be saved by his Department in community charge benefit subsidy in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92 for each local authority which is a housing benefit authority as a result of poll tax capping.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Family Credit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the total percentage of applicants for family credit who were turned down in each of the most recent 24 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Severe Disability Premium

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the organisations consulted by the Social Security Advisory Committee about his Department's proposed changes to the severe disability premium regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the Social Security Advisory Committee wrote to six organisations concerned with disabled people or their carers, seeking their views on the proposed amendment to regulations. The organisations were as follows:

The Disability Alliance
The Disablement Income Group
RADAR
Carers' National Association
The Spastics Society
British Council of Organisations of Disabled People

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people under the age of 25 years are in receipt of (a) community charge benefit and (b) housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The most recent survey information indicates that in May 1989, a total of 460,000 householders aged less than 25 years in Great Britain were in receipt of housing benefit. This estimate excludes those under 25 years old in Scotland who were in receipt of community charge rebate, but who were not receiving help with rent; this information is not available.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Expenditure, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table showing expenditure in 1989-90, broken down by regions, with Greater London shown as a separate region, for job clubs, the Employment Service, and jobcentres.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table setting out the number of YOP, YTS and YT places available in Greater London in every year from 1975, including figures for 1991, or estimates for 1991 if figures are not available.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is given in the table. Information prior to 1984 is not available. Agreed place information from April 1990 is not available.

Dangerous Substances (Accidents)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to examine the conclusions of the report published by the joint research centre of the European Commission on lessons learnt from emergencies after accidents in the United Kingdom involving dangerous substances—DOC. EUR. 13322EN.

Mr. Forth: The report has been studied, on my behalf, by the Health and Safety Executive. As regards matters that are my responsibility, the lessons learnt from this and other studies are being taken into account in the current fundamental review of EC directive 82/501/EEC, the "Seveso" directive, which deals with major accident hazards.

Toxic Substances Bulletin

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current distribution of the toxic substances bulletin published by the Health and Safety Executive; and what assessment he has made of the benefits to health and safety at work of the bulletin.

Mr. Forth: The latest available figures—April 1991—show that there are 2,280 subscribers who receive a total of 2,608 copies of the Health and Safety Executive's toxic substances bulletin. There is also an internal distribution within Government Departments.

It is a statutory duty of the Health and Safety Commission to make appropriate arrangements for providing relevant information to those concerned with health and safety at work. The bulletin has proved to be a useful tool in providing information about current developments on toxic substances, both in the United Kingdom and the European Community, in an easily accessible format. I have arranged for copies of the most recent edition to be placed in the Library of this House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Share Ownership

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) of 4 June, at column 170, on cash limits, if he will outline the reasons why the funds provided for assistance for the share ownership movement have been allocated under the consumer and investor protection programme.

Mr. Lilley: The proposed assistance is aimed at increasing the provision of information to investors, allowing informed choices to be made and therefore contributing towards the objectives of my Department's work on consumer and investor protection.

Cash Limits

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) of 4 June at column 170, on cash limits, if he will set out the increase or decrease in his Department's budget, by expenditure area and in total, in 1991-92 in real terms relative to the expenditure level of the Department after the equivalent supplementary estimate announcement of 1990-91.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is set out in the table.

1. The lower level of net provision in 1991-92 for airbus development reflects a considerably reduced requirement for launch aid for the A330/340 Airbus in accordance with the launch aid contract and an increased level of expected levy receipts on the A320 Airbus.

2. Planned gross expenditure by EIEC for 1991-92 is £126·3 million. This will be funded by asset sales. Surplus receipts—£16·8 million—will be surrendered to the DTI.

Notes to Tables: All figures are for estimates provision net of receipts, rounded to the nearest £0·1 million. The items do not sum to the totals in all cases because of rounding. The table compares the position after the publication on 12 June 1990 of the revised estimate for class IV vote 2 with that after the publication of the summer supplementary estimates for class IV votes 2 and 3 on 13 June 1991. The cash figures for 1991-92 have been converted to 1990-91 prices using the GDP deflator of 7 per cent., as set out in table 2.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1991-92"—House of Commons No. 300.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 4 June at column 170, to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on cash limits, if he will provide details of the mechanism by which certain items are to be fully met by receipts from the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the European Community receipts in question will be appropriated in aid of class IV vote 2. For the purposes of the public expenditure planning total, such receipts are classified as programme 2.7—net payments to European Community institutions—for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible. The consequent net reduction in that programme exactly offsets the increase in my Department's cash limit.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out in tabular form the areas of expenditure covered by the supplementary estimate changes to his Department's cash limit and running cost limits for 1991-92 announced on 4 June at column 170 in ascending cash value order.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is set out, although not in ascending cash value order, in the summary to the summer supplementary estimate for class IV vote 2 which were presented to the House on 13 June.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to which sections and sub-headings of the estimate for class IV, vote 2, each of the charges and activities described in his announcement of 4 June at column 170 on cash limit changes will be attributed.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is set out in the summer supplementary estimate for class IV vote 2 which was presented to the House on 13 June.

Consumer Safety

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) of 4 June, at column 170 on cash limits, if he will list the activities for which funds have been allocated to the Department's promotion of consumer safety.

Mr. Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the sum of £71,000 for my Department's promotion of consumer safety will be allocated towards the moving, construction, publicising and operation of the child safety "Hazard Dome" during 1991 at the Lightwater Valley theme park in North Yorkshire as part of the home safety awareness scheme.

Arms Industries

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what figures he has for the amount of money being spent in the United Kingdom on research into conversion of arms industries to non-arms production.

Mr. Leigh: Information of this sort is not collected centrally.

South Africa

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the trade restrictions that are still in force in respect of South Africa.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) on 7 May Official Report, column 409.

Overseas Exhibitions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grants were made from public funds towards travel and costs of exhibition stands at Dubai '91 and the international defence equipment and aviation exhibition in Ankara, November 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury: To date no financial subsidy has been provided by the Department of Trade and Industry to exhibitors at Dubai '91 and the international defence equipment and aviation exhibition, Ankara. The subsidy for companies which qualify for support will be at the standard rate of 50 per cent. of the eligible costs of space and stand construction and up to two travel grants at the appropriate country rates for Dubai and Turkey.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1990.

Mr. Leigh: The 17th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1990 to 31 December 1990. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Post Office Counter Services

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress Post Office Counters has made in implementing the recommendations of the 1988 Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Post Office counter services at Crown offices.

Mr. Leigh: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission reported on Post Office counter services at Crown offices on 23 June 1988, Cm 398. Post Office Counters' initial response to this report was made available to the House on 21 December 1988, Official Report, columns 265-66. My Department agreed with Post Office Counters a detailed timetable for implementation of the accepted recommendations, and a reporting regime involving interim reports on progress, a main report in mid-1989, Official Report, 27 July 1989, column 812 and a final report in June 1991. I am today placing copies of the final report by Post Office Counters in the Library of the House.

Post Office Counters was able to accept, in whole or in part, 79 of the MMC's 80 recommendations. Action has now been completed on 76 recommendations. Of these, Post Office Counters has concluded, on the basis of detailed work, that two linked recommendations—Nos. 59 and 60—are impractical in the form suggested by the MMC. These recommendations propose that clients should each decide, on the basis of different options presented by Post Office Counters, the size and shape of network that they are willing to pay for. Post Office Counters has accepted the principle lying behind these recommendations, that clients' requirements should inform the provision of services and products, and will continue to look at ways of bringing this principle into their discussions with clients.

Post Office Counters continues to take action on the three remaining recommendations. These are:

recommendation 6a, dealing with the charging of occupancy costs for property on an open market rental basis; this depends on hardware and software becoming fully operational, forecast for April 1992;

recommendation 18, concerning the assumption by Counters from Royal Mail of responsibility for all stamp vending machines; some of these have required modification to provide consistent customer service, and the handover should be completed by the end of 1991; recommendation 67f, proposing that the costs of the data transmission network be shared among its users; this will be further pursued when the related network automation plans are authorised—(earliest completion date July 1992).

My officials will continue to monitor progress on the implementation of these three outstanding recommendations.

The original report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission was based on a wide-ranging and thorough review of counter services in Crown offices; I commend Post Office Counters for the conscientious and constructive manner in which it has addressed the MMC recommendations.

Textile Machinery

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what consultations he has had with British textile machinery manufacturers about proposed new European regulations on magnetic compatibility;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that British textile machinery manufacturers do not suffer unnecessarily under the terms of proposed new European regulations on magnetic compatibility;

(3) if he has any plans to visit Sir James Farmer Norton and Co. to discuss the possible impact of proposed new regulations on magnetic compatibility;

(4) if he will list those testing facilities which currently exist in the north-west of England which could be used for testing compliance of heavy machinery with proposed new regulations on magnetic compatibility.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 June 1991]: My officials met officers and members of the British Textile Machinery Association on 12 June to discuss the electro-magnetic compatibility directive. I am not aware of any reason why British textile machinery manufacturers should be disadvantaged by the directive.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Sir James Farmer Norton and Co.

Manufacturers following the "standards" route to compliance with the directive may use any test facilities, including their own. I regret that the Department does not have a list of such facilities in the north-west of England.

"Competent bodies" have not yet been appointed to issue technical reports or certificates for manufacturers following the "technical file" route to compliance with the directive.

Strategic Arms Reduction

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterpart in the United States of America on strategic arms reduction talks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discusses arms control issues regularly with Mr. Baker and we keep in very close contact with the United States Administration on the subject at other levels. The START talks themselves are a matter for the United States and Soviet Union.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring his Department undertakes of the United States and Soviet proposals for reducing the number of nuclear warheads; and what sources of expertise are available to him on the quantity of fissile material that might be made redundant if a strategic arms reduction treaty is concluded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have strongly supported United States and Soviet negotiations for reduction of their nuclear arsenals. Fissile material made redundant under strategic arms reduction treaty is a matter for the two parties.

Journalists' Deaths (Iraq)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with the Red Cross and the Red Crescent concerning the investigation of the disappearance of the British television journalist, Roseanna Della Casa, and the deaths of Nick Della Casa and Charles Maxwell in the Turkish-Iraqi border region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British mission to the United Nations in Geneva first raised the matter of the disappearance of Rosanna della Casa, Nicholas della Casa and Charles Maxwell with the International Committee of the Red Cross on 17 April 1991. ICRC delegates in Iraq have since then had many written and oral contacts with the Iraqi authorities. They continue actively to pursue the disappearance of Rosanna della Casa.

We maintain regular contact with the ICRC in Geneva. We have had no direct contacts with the Red Crescent.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to report to the House details of the report of the visit made by the International Atomic Energy Agency's special inspection team in Iraq between 14 and 22 May, pursuant to United Nations Security Council resolution 687.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would be wrong for us to publish details of IAEA documents communicated in confidence to IAEA member states. It is for the IAEA, with the UN special commission, to make such details public.

Thailand (Sanctuary)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Thai Government on the proposed forced repatriation of Burmese people who have sought sanctuary in Thailand.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth office raised the subject of Burmese immigrants in Thailand with the Thai Foreign Minister on 6 June. The Thai authorities are aware of our concern that no Burmese should be forcibly returned to face persecution in Burma.

Chittagong Hill Tracts

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received a copy of the report produced by the Chittagong Hill Tracts Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes. The report is a useful contribution to public knowledge and debate about the problems of the Chittagong hill tracts.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Bangladesh regarding reports of human rights violations of ethnic minorities in the Chittagong hill tracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regularly made our concerns about the situation in the Chittagong Hill tracts known to the Government of Bangladesh. We welcome their recent decision to implement the 1989 devolution plans in full, to allow the three hill tract councils greater autonomy.

Office for Emergency Operations in Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, at the meeting of United Nations heads of agencies, donors and non-governmental organisations on 27 June, in New York, Her Majesty's Government will support the proposal to re-establish the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are considering the best organisational response to the serious situation in Africa. As I told the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 17 June, the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa provided excellent inter-agency co-operation from 1984 to 1986. Since its experiences are reflected in current United Nations working practices, re-establishing it now does not automatically guarantee improved co-ordination. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the German Foreign Minister launched a joint initiative on 9 June to improve and support the way the United Nations responds to humanitarian disasters and emergencies including those in Africa.

Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration Her Majesty's Government have given to signing the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The AMB treaty is a bilateral agreement between the United States and Soviet Union; the question of United Kingdom signature does not therefore arise.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 June, Official Report, column 49, if he will give such information as is available without disproportionate cost, in the form of his answers of 30 April 1990, Official Report, column 405, and 10 May 1990, Official Report, column 205.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his reply, 19 June 1991, c. 206.]: The figures for ODA energy consumption and expenditure in the financial year 1990-91 were as follows:

Consumption	Figures
(i) Electricity (kwh)	6,268,388
(ii) Gas (therms)	486,942
(iii) Fuel Oil (litres)	66,221
Expenditure	£
(i) Electricity	393,101
(ii) Gas	185,149
(iii) Fuel Oil	11,316

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the amounts of (a) planned and (b) actual expenditure on capital projects for voluntary-aided schools in each of the last five years; and what is the planned expenditure for 1991-92.

Mr. Fallon: Figures for planned and actual expenditure on capital building work at voluntary aided and special agreement schools between 1986 and 1992 are as follows:

	(a) Planned £ million	(b) Actual £ million
1986-87	27·8	31·8
1987-88	39·1	37·2
1988-89	55·3	50·3
1989-90	65·3	67·6
1990-91	87·2	75·3
1991-92	98·8	—

Note:

These figures include governors' contributions but exclude any work conducted off-programme and any which would be the responsibility of the Local Education Authority.

School Meals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has of the number of local education authorities which have now discontinued the provision of school meals on an authority-wide basis; and if he will list the authorities.

Mr. Fallon: All local education authorities in England are obliged to provide a free school meal for any pupil whose family is on income support. In January 1990, the latest date for which information is available, some paid meals were also provided in all authorities.

School Premises

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has of the proportion of secondary school places in each local education authority that are in temporary accommodation; and whether he will list all such authorities with more than 20 per cent. in temporary accommodation, giving the estimated proportion of such places in each case.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not available centrally.

Brent (Schoolchildren)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state how many children who are resident in the London borough of Brent are educated in the London borough of Barnet.

Mr. Fallon: As at January 1990, a total of 1,634 school pupils belonging to the area of the London borough of Brent were being educated in the London borough of Barnet.

Education, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a table setting out the number of pupils in Greater London reaching the school leaving age in every year from 1975, including figures for 1991 or estimates for 1991 if figures are not available.

Mr. Fallon: The table shows the number of pupils in maintained secondary schools in Greater London in their final year of compulsory education. The figure for 1990-91 has been estimated on the basis of the number of pupils in their penultimate year of compulsory education in 1989-90.

Pupils in their final year of compulsory education in maintained secondary schools in Greater London, academic years 1974-75 to 1990-91.

Mr. Tony Banks : To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he has any plans to provide further funds for London's education service;

(2) if he has received a copy of the Association of London Authorities' report "Taking Stock, The Resources Needed to Fund London's Education Service."

Mr. Eggar: Yes. My right hon. and learned Friend has seen the document. The Government have provided a financial framework in which London councils can provide a high-quality education service if they manage their affairs well. Standard spending assessments for London for all services are on average 21 per cent. higher in 1991-92 than in 1990-91, while education standard spending assessments have risen 18 per cent. on average. Inner London also receives help through special education grants, which total £70 million in 1991-92 alone. The average SSA allowance for pupils of compulsory school age is around 50 per cent. higher in inner London than in Barnsley or Sheffield.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a table for Greater London, showing the number of places available at, and the number of 16-year-old students entering separately, sixth forms, sixth-form colleges, tertiary colleges, and further education colleges in every year from 1975, including figures for 1991 or estimates for 1991 if figures are not available.

Mr. Eggar: The number of places available at, and the number of 16-year-old students entering, sixth-form colleges is not available centrally. The number of full or part-time students aged 16 years in sixth forms, sixth-form colleges and further education colleges are as follows:

	Sixth forms (thousands)	Sixth form colleges (thousands)	Further education (thousands)	Percentage of population aged 16[1]

Teacher Training, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he plans to take in respect of London in response to the conclusions of Her Majesty's inspector's report on training teachers for inner city schools.

Mr. Fallon: We have asked the higher education funding councils to give specific consideration, in the allocation of initial teacher training places, to courses which are particularly focused on the needs of inner city schools and which give the students concerned experience of teaching in such areas.

We have made available grants to the Urban Learning Foundation, whose work in inner London was commended in Her Majesty's inspector's report, and the St. Peter's Saltley project, which provides teaching experience in inner city Birmingham for trainee teachers.

We have commissioned research by Professor Desmond Nuttall of the London School of Economics to establish whether increasing the number of trainees at institutions in London would in itself increase the number of those taking up first appointments there.

Finally, in the light of Her Majesty's inspector's findings, the Teaching as a Career Unit's spring advertising campaign "Train to Teach in London" was specifically targeted towards people resident in London, more than 11,000 of whom responded.

Blind Students

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he intends that blind and partially sighted students should have the opportunity to take the GCSE as key stage 4 of the national curriculum;

(2) what arrangements are being made by his Department to ensure that examination papers for the GCSE are available in Braille.

Mr. Eggar: Examination papers are made available in braille for those visually impaired candidates who are notified to the examining groups as needing this facility. The cost of brailling papers is spread evenly over the examination fees of all GCSE candidates. I would envisage these arrangements continuing with the introduction of the national curriculum.

Environmental Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received a report on the meeting hosted at Warwick university on 22 May by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on the development of environmental education and business schools, universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Fallon: Yes.

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish proposals to put into effect his policy of expecting whole classes of pupils who have taken examinations for GCSE or equivalent qualifications in national curriculum subjects early from the further requirements of the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The National Curriculum Council, as required by section 20(3) of the Education Reform Act 1988, will next week give notice of my proposal to except whole classes of pupils who have taken examinations for GCSE or equivalent qualifications in national curriculum subjects early from all the provisions of the national curriculum relating to that subject at key stage 4. I announced my intention of issuing such a proposal in January. Copies of my proposal have been placed in the Library.

My proposal is that where groups of particularly able pupils complete full courses of studies in particular national curriculum subjects before the last year of key stage 4 and take the relevant GCSE or equivalent examinations in those subjects, they should be discharged from any further requirement to follow the programmes of study or be formally assessed in those subjects. Pupils in such circumstances would then be free to use in other ways the time which they would otherwise have spent continuing to follow national curriculum requirements, as is already possible for individual pupils who take their GCSEs early.

At present, the obligation to study further the relevant provisions of the national curriculum can be lifted only, in the case of individual pupils completing their national curriculum studies early, by moving such pupils into classes of older pupils. It is my view that the present restriction upon the accelerated progress of whole classes of pupils should now be removed.

The period for the submission of evidence and representations on the proposals to the National Curriculum Council will end on 27 September 1991. The council will then report to me. I intend to publish draft regulations, as required by section 20(5) of the Act, in November 1991. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is separately directing the statutory consultation process in Wales.

Student Support

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information about Government support for students he will make available this year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have today published a booklet, "Student Grants and Loans 1991-92". It brings together for the first time information on the two main parts of the Government's system of financial support for students. Copies are being sent—in England and Wales—to schools with sixth forms, colleges, local education authorities and careers information officers; and to higher education institutions throughout the United Kingdom. Further copies are available on request. Copies have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether following the current review of the Education (School Government) Regulations 1989, he will amend the regulations in order to prevent the chairman and governors of a maintained school that agrees to close in order to assist the establishment of a city technology college from acquiring employment with the city technology college trust or a body sponsoring a city technical college.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 June 1991]: Such an amendment would be neither statutorily possible nor desirable.

SCOTLAND

Students

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for academic year 1990-91 (a) the number of students from Scotland in receipt of grants to attend universities or colleges in England and Wales and (b) the number of students not domiciled in Scotland attending Scottish universities and colleges; and what percentage of the total that figure represents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available figures for the number of undergraduate students attending Scottish universities and colleges who are not domiciled in Scotland are for academic year 1989-90. These are set out in the table.

	Attending universities and colleges in Scotland	Not domiciled in Scotland	Percentage
Universities	44,094	14,601	33
Colleges	36,825	2,581	7
	80,919	17,182	21

In academic year 1989-90, the number of undergraduate students domiciled in Scotland who were in receipt of grants to attend universities and colleges in England, Wales and Northern Ireland was 4,338. Provisional figures for academic year 1990-91 indicate that this figure will rise to 4,555.

Pedestrian Crossing, Fraser Park

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Highlands regional council concerning a survey carried out in 1990 with a view to the provision of a pedestrian crossing on the A96 at Fraser Park, Nairn.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The findings of the survey carried out by Highland regional council in 1990 showed that the pedestrian-vehicle flows at this location fell well short of the figure required to meet the criteria justifying the provision of a crossing. I understand that the council plans a further survey in July this year.

Deer

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the West Grampian Deer Management Group and Mr. John Grant of Rothiemurchus.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The West Grampian Deer Management Group, of which Mr. Grant is a member, has recently responded to our consultation paper on natural heritage areas.

Care Homes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics he has on the number of trained or qualified staff in (a) children's homes, (b) homes for the elderly and (c) hostels for the mentally handicapped.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held centrally on the number of qualified staff in establishments in the independent sector or on the training of staff in all sectors. In local authority homes for children and the elderly, there were, at October 1989, 434 and 775 staff respectively with a formal qualification; but the corresponding information on homes for the mentally handicapped is not separately identified. A total of 1,545 officers in charge and assistant officers in charge of local authority residential establishments were qualified as follows:

	Per cent.
Certificate of Qualification in Social Work—or equivalent	9
Certificate in Social Service	14
Other Social Service Qualifications	5
Nursing Qualifications	22

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

15. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's forecast for the balance of payments deficit in the first half of 1992 at an annualised rate.

Mr. Maples: The figure is £8 billion.

Equipment (Write-off)

16. Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to allow an earlier write-off of capital equipment purchased by manufacturing industry.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to do so. The present capital allowance regime for equipment already provides a generous average rate of depreciation for tax purposes.

VAT (Police Cars)

17. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the way police authorities pay value added tax on police cars they buy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to change the VAT treatment of police cars. Where VAT is non-recoverable by a police authority, as is the case when it purchases police cars, this is allowed for in its funding.

Institute of Directors

18. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations about economic policy he has received from the Institute of Directors.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox).

Interest Rates

19. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to persuade the high street banks to reduce their margins on loans to small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

20. Mr. Carr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has taken to assess the impact of high interest rates on small businesses.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend has asked Treasury officials and the Bank of England to look into these questions.

Interest Rates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry regarding interest rate policy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have received a number of such representations.

Mortgage Repossessions

22. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of mortgage repossessions in 1990.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of mortgage repossessions in 1990.

Mr. John Maples: Figures published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders show that 43,890 properties were repossessed in 1990.

Economic Downturn

23. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect of the current downturn on the economy in the north-west and south-east.

Mr. Mellor: No regions are immune from the current recession, but falling inflation will provide a firm foundation for economic growth in the north-west and south-east and throughout the United Kingdom.

Earnings

24. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in real take-home pay for a married man with two children on average earnings between 1979 and 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. J. Pawsey).

Civil Service Pay

25. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the recent Office of Manpower Economics report comparing civil service pay levels with the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Each of the civil service long-term pay agreements provides for a survey every four years of the pay and benefit levels in relevant jobs outside the public services sector to inform the pay negotiations. There are no such surveys this year. When my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer met representatives of the National Union of Civil and Public Servants on 11 June, they referred among other things to the survey conducted last year in respect of executive and related staff.

Privatisation

26. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total revenue from privatisation receipts since 1979 in today's prices.

Mr. Mellor: Total privatisation proceeds since 1979 to 1990-91 are about £41 billion in 1990-91 prices.

Inflation

27. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. Maples: The 12-month all-items RPI inflation rate was 5·8 per cent. in May, the lowest rate since August 1988. RPI inflation is now more than 5 percentage points below its peak last autumn and has fallen for seven successive months. We are on track for the Budget forecast of 4 per cent. in the fourth quarter of this year.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

28. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any representations from British commerce or industry urging the withdrawal of the £ sterling from the exchange rate mechanism of the EMS.

Mr. Maples: I have received very few such representations.

Inward Investment

29. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of tax revenue from the profits of inward investing companies from overseas (a) for the current year and (b) for 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimates of United Kingdom taxes on profits due abroad, which are published in table 5.1 of the 1990 Blue Book, are given in the table for 1979 and 1989, the latest year for which information is available.

	£ million
1979	1,047
1989	5,952

21. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of United States investment in the EC during 1990 was in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: Latest available figures from the OECD show that in 1988 and 1989 over 60 per cent. of total United States direct investment in the EC was in the United Kingdom.

Foreign Governments (Rates Bills)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Governments with official premises in London have not paid their rates bills; what are the individual amounts concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The Crown Property Unit, formerly the Rating of Government Property Department, collects the beneficial portion of the rates from diplomatic missions.

The following missions have arrears outstanding in respect of claims made before 1 April 1991 on official premises in London.

	Amount outstanding (£)
Afghanistan	12,300
Cote d'Ivoire	14,900
France	10,900
Grenada	5,000
Iran	16,200
Iraq	115,300
Jordan	1,500

	Amount outstanding (£)
Liberia	1,200
Libya	21,300
Morocco	4,000
Pakistan	8,600
Portugal	1,900
Sierra Leone	13,100
Sudan	1,000
Uganda	34,900
Venezuela	26,600
Zambia	6,800

The Crown Property Unit and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office regularly approach countries that are in arrears and urge them to make payment.

Mortgages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 114-16, on mortgage payments, if he will give the information on a monthly basis.

Mr. Maude: Monthly figures may be obtained by multiplying the weekly figures in the previous answer by 52 and divided by 12.

Leased Car Tax

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to exempt community nurses from leased car tax.

Mr. Maude: Community nurses are treated in the same way as all other employees for the purpose of the car benefit scale charges and there are no plans to change that.

VAT

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of licensed employment agencies are designated as agent and what proportion as principal for VAT purposes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Records of whether licensed employment agencies are designated as agent or as principal for VAT purposes are not held centrally and the information sought could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was collected in VAT payments from (a) nursing agencies licensed under the Nursing Agencies Act 1957 and (b) licensed employment agencies in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not possible to isolate total VAT payments made by nursing agencies licensed under the Nursing Agencies Act 1957 or licensed employment agents. Nor is sufficiently detailed information available on consumers' expenditure in this area to make an estimate.

Taxation

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proportion of taxpayers pay a smaller percentage of their earnings in direct and indirect taxes in 1991-92 than in 1978-79:

(2) what proportion of taxpayers pay a smaller percentage of their earnings in income tax and national insurance contributions in 1991-92 than in 1978-79.

Mr. Maude: There are no data available which match up the tax payments of particular taxpayers in 1991-92 with payments by the same taxpayers in 1978-79.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of earnings was paid in income tax and national insurance contributions, less child benefit where appropriate, by a single person, and by a married couple with two children, on an income of up to half average male earnings, between half and average male earnings, and above average male earnings, in 1978-79; what is the comparable information for 1991-92; and how many taxpayers, in total, were within each of those three earning groups in each case.

Mr. Maude: Figures for a single person, and a married man with two children, on an income of half, average, and one-and-a-half times average male earnings are set out in the table. These figures are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances; have income only from employment; and pay class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate. For other taxpayers, tax payments will vary according to the level and sources of their income, their family circumstances, their entitlement to other tax reliefs and so on.

Liability to tax depends on total income rather than on earnings; taxpayers may or may not be earners, and earners may or may not be taxpayers. Information on the number of earners in different earnings groups may be found in the New Earnings Survey.

Percentage of earnings paid in income tax and NICs

	Multiples of average male earnings
	½	1	1½
1978-79
Single	23·6	31·5	33·3
Married man with two children[1]	2·5	20·9	26·2
1991-92
Single	22·3	28·2	28·1
Married man with two children[1]	7·7	20·8	23·2

[1] Including child tax allowances and less child benefit.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of earnings was paid in direct and indirect taxation by a single person, and a married couple with two children, on an income of up to half average male earnings, between half and average male earnings, and above average male earnings, in 1978-79; and if he will give the comparable figure for 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: Figures for a single person, and a married couple with two children, on average male earnings are set out in the table. These figures are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances; have income only from employment; and pay class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate.

The estimates of indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the Family Expenditure Survey, making the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. Reliable estimates cannot be made outside the range of three quarters to one-and-a-half times average male earnings.

For other taxpayers, tax payments will vary according to the level and sources of their income, their family circumstances, their entitlement to other tax reliefs, the level and pattern of their expenditure and so on.

Table: Percentage of earnings paid in direct and indirect taxes[1]
At average male earnings

	1978-79	1992-93
Single	42·5	40·6
One earner married couple with two children	32·2	33·4

[1] Excluding local taxes.

Sport Governing Bodies

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt the national governing bodies of sport from corporation tax.

Mr. Maude: None.

Charitable Giving

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated level of charitable giving in 1990.

Mr. Maude: There are no comprehensive data on donations to charities, but there is evidence of a substantial increase in real terms in recent years. For example, the Charities Aid Foundation's estimates show that donations to the top 200 fund-raising charities amounted to £1,058 million in 1988-89 which, in real terms, is more than double the corresponding figure for 1978-79.

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average annual rate of growth in manufacturing exports was between 1974 and 1979; and what is the equivalent figure for the years 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Maples: On a balance of payments basis the United Kingdom volume of exports of manufactures[1] is estimated to have risen by an average of 2 per cent. a year between 1974 and 1979. The equivalent figure for the period 1979 to 1990 is 4 per cent. a year.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies have been made by Her Majesty's Government of the benefit for the United Kingdom of economic and monetary union and a common currency, respectively.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 26 June 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to him on 7 December 1990 at column 216. In addition, Her Majesty's Government published in January this year draft proposals for a hard ecu, to be managed by a European monetary fund; these were tabled at the intergovernmental conference. In his speech to the House on 24 January, Official Report, column 470, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer set out the Government's assessment both of a single currency and of our proposals for a hard ecu.

Unincorporated Businesses

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on Treasury revenues of extending to unincorporated business the loss carry-back provisions for incorporated businesses proposed by the Government in new clause 46 of the Finance Bill.

Mr. Maude: The loss relief provisions contained in new clause 46 of the Finance Bill apply to losses for accounting periods ending on or after 1 April 1991. The effect of extending the provisions to unincorporated businesses would depend on the amount of any losses made in those and later accounting periods, but it might reduce tax receipts by £50 million in 1991-92, £35 million in 1992-93 and £15 million annually thereafter.

HEALTH

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that health authorities implement the new arrangements for junior doctors' hours as quickly as possible.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Task forces have been set up throughout the country to assist regional, district and special health authorities and NHS trusts in ensuring that the contracted hours of duty of doctors in training are reduced to the agreed limits as soon as is practicable.

Task forces will be responsible for ensuring that every training post is identified, for ascertaining the current working practice of each training post and for identifying those in which the doctors are contracted for duty for hours in excess of the agreed limits. They will be expected to advise on ways of reducing contracted hours of duty, for monitoring progress in achieving the required reductions in hours and for reporting on progress at six-monthly intervals to the ministerial and technical groups.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to maintain downward pressure on junior doctors' hours.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The ministerial group on junior doctors' hours, which I chair, and its supporting technical group, will be monitoring progress on reducing the hours of duty of hospital doctors and dentists in training, through the implementation of the guidance issued on 12 June. A copy of the guidance has been placed in the Library.

Nurses

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has issued any guidance to employment agencies which supply unqualified nursing staff for private clients, on the assessment of client needs and general good practice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The licensing and control of employment agencies that supply unqualified nursing staff is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to amend the Nursing Agencies Act 1957 to bring the provision of unqualified nursing staff under the terms of the Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Sickle-cell Disease

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, and by district health authority, for the last 10 years, the amount of funding at current prices which has been provided for sickle-cell treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Local Authority Homes (Transfer)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the local authorities' continuing responsibilities for residents of former local authority part III homes which are transferred to the private or voluntary sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 25 June at column 428.

Women's Health

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's new booklet on women's health.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: "Your Health—A Guide to Services for Women", published on Monday 24 June, is part of the wider Government initiative to improve and promote health. It draws together, in a single publication, brief details of the main health services which are available to women, encourages full use of them and gives tips on how to get the best out of those services.

The booklet highlights the many preventive services, such as breast and cervical cancer screening, which are available to protect and promote women's health. It also shows where more information can be obtained on a range of issues in the form of leaflets, advice lines or organisations to contact.

There will be a wide distribution of the booklet, including in hospital waiting rooms, GP surgeries, pharmacies, public libraries and citizens advice bureaux. It will also be advertised in women's magazines and national newspapers with copies available to those requesting them by Freepost or Freephone.

Copies are available in the Library.

Appointments

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be reviewing the appointments of chairmen of district health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The terms of office of 108 chairmen of district health authorities come up for review on 31 March 1992. Appointments and reappointments will be announced in due course. If hon. Members wish to nominate any individuals for appointment they are invited to write to me by the end of July.

Blood Transfusions (HIV)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how blood given by donors is screened to ensure that it is free of the HIV virus; whether the screening process guarantees that all blood used for transfusions is free of the virus; and when the current screening process started being used.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since September 1983 potential donors who have engaged in high-risk activities have been asked not to give blood. From October 1985, all blood donations have been tested for the presence of the HIV antibody using evaluated methods. Any positive samples undergo confirmatory tests at a reference laboratory. As a further safeguard, blood products such as factor VIII are heat-treated to inactivate any trace of the virus that may be present. Also, doctors are advised by the profession not to give blood to patients unnecessarily.

All reasonable steps are taken to exclude HIV infection from the blood supply in this country.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has supplied, in response to representations from non-haemophiliacs infected with HIV virus from NHS blood transfusions, in respect of the effects of pre-existing haemophilia on the employment, mortgage and insurance prospects of HIV-infected haemophiliacs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have not considered it necessary to supply evidence in response to representations.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the haemophiliacs infected with the HIV virus who have received payments from his Department were related.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Among the haemophiliacs infected with HIV, we understand that there are 65 pairs and six trios of brothers who are infected. We believe there may be a significant number of other cases where HIV-infected haemophiliacs are related, for example, grandfathers, grandsons, uncles and nephews, but these cannot be readily identified from the available information. In addition, there are a number of cases where the haemophiliac's spouse or partner has become infected.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that people who have been infected with the HIV virus from an NHS blood transfusion and are taking legal action are provided with the information they require about the blood they were given and the donor who provided it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Disclosure of information and discovery of documents in litigation are governed by court procedures, which include scope for claiming public interest immunity in appropriate cases.

Royal National Institute for Rheumatic Fevers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers of restraint or other controls he has over the employment and dismissal of employees including nurses, auxiliaries, ancillary workers and consultants, the procurement of supplies, the letting of contracts, the provision of ear, nose and throat services, casualty departments and maternity services and outpatient clinics, the range of operations provided, the sale of property, and the maintenance of buildings, in the case of the Royal National Institute for Rheumatic Fevers in Bath.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Royal National Hospital for Rheumatic Diseases NHS trust, like all other NHS trusts, is operationally independent and can exercise the powers given to NHS trusts in the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to employ staff on conditions they consider appropriate, to buy and sell property and to enter into NHS and other contracts. The trust board is responsible for determining the overall policies of the trust. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a range of reserve powers to intervene in trusts' affairs as defined at paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on trends in tobacco consumption in those European countries where tobacco advertising has been banned.

Mr. Dorrell: A report published by the New Zealand Toxic Substances Board in May 1989 summarised tobacco consumption trends in 33 developed countries.

A table in the report contains the following information on those European countries with complete tobacco advertising bans:

Country and Year of Ban	Years Studied	Consumption Gms/Adult		Average Change Percentage per annum
		From	To
Total ban on tobacco promotion for health reasons
Iceland 1972	72-86	3,426	3,326	−0·2
Finland 1978	78-86	2,087	2,017	−0·4
Norway 1975	75-86	2,017	1,927	−0·8
Portugal 1983	83-86	2,068	1,750	−5·1
Advertising never permitted for political reasons
Albania	80-86	1,254	1,183	−0·9
Bulgaria	80-86	2,330	2,282	−0·3
Czechoslovakia	80-86	2,612	2,374	−1·8
East Germany	80-86	2,403	2,408	0·0
Hungary	80-86	3,420	3,246	−0·8
Poland	80-86	3,529	3,558	+0·1
Rumania	80-86	2,027	2,071	+0·4
Soviet Union	80-86	2,106	2,149	+0·3
Yugoslavia	80-86	3,269	3,102	−0·9

These figures compare with an average change in the United Kingdom of minus 2 per cent. during the period 1970-86.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the location of the five regional monitoring centres established to monitor NHS trusts; when the centres will start their monitoring; what matters will be monitored; how many staff each centre will employ; what accommodation each centre will occupy; what budget will be allocated to each centre over each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are intending to appoint as soon as possible one person in each of five regions—North West Thames, North East Thames, South Western, Trent and Mersey—to assist in the NHS management executive monitoring of NHS trusts' performance of their financial duties. The five host regional health authorities have each been asked to provide accommodation for the monitoring officer. The Department has allocated £50,000 for 1991-92 as a contribution to the costs of each of the five centres and this sum will be kept under review in future years.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what status the five regional monitoring centres of NHS trusts will enjoy; whether staff will be employed on NHS pay and conditions of employment; to whom the centres will report; with what frequency they will report; whether such reports will be made public; what sanctions centres possess if any trust refuses to provide information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The five local monitoring officers will be employed on NHS terms and conditions and they will report directly to the NHS management executive—NHSME—which will direct their day-to-day work. They will not be required to produce formal reports: they will simply be part of the financial monitoring arrangements for trusts set up by the NHSME. Under paragraph 8 of schedule 2 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 all NHS trusts are required to furnish such information as I may require.

Fluoridation

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a decision will be made on the fluoridation of the water supply to Greater Manchester and Lancashire.

Mr. Dorrell: North West Water commissioned a study into the design and costings for a standard fluoridation plant. The report is expected by the end of September 1991. The local health authorities believe that North West Water will then have all the technical information it requires to decide whether it is technically able to accede to the health authorities' requests to supply fluoridated water to the region.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which district health authorities have made applications to their local water authorities for fluoridation of the water supply in each year since 1985.

Mr. Dorrell: The following district health authorities asked water undertakers to supply fluoridated water:

Stockport
Bolton
Wigan

Oldham
Tameside and Glossop
Rochdale
Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble
Salford
Trafford
Bury
Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale
Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde
Lancaster
Chorley and South Ribble
Preston
North Manchester
Central Manchester
South Manchester
North Staffordshire
Macclesfield
South Cumbria
East Cumbria

All the requests were made in 1988.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which water authorities have fluoridated their water supply in each year since 1985.

Mr. Dorrell: The following water authorities have fluoridated water supplies since 1985:

Anglian Water Services Limited
North West Water Limited
Northumbrian Water Limited
Severn Trent Water Limited
Thames Water Utilities Limited
Colne Valley Water Company
East Worcestershire Water Company
Newcastle and Gateshead Water Company
South Staffordshire Water Company

Yorkshire Water which was supplying fluoridated water in 1985 stopped doing so with effect from 31 October 1989.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual charge for fluoridation of the water supply charged by each water authority.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for local negotiation and information is not held centrally.

Dental Charges

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of people annually who are eligible for a reduction in dental charges or exempt from dental charges who do not claim.

Mr. Dorrell: We estimate that some 41 per cent. of patients are entitled to free NHS dental treatment. It is not possible to quantify the number of people who do not claim.

Ambulance Personnel (Misconduct)

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many charges against ambulance personnel were made in each division in England and Wales for (a) general misconduct and (b) gross misconduct for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Transfusion Aids

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations the Minister for Health has received from Graham L. Ross about transfusion aids legislation; what reply is being sent; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have placed in the Library a copy of an official reply which has been sent to Mr. Graham Ross of J. Keith Park and Co.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons Reduction

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) NATO strategy and (b) the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent of future reductions in the global total of nuclear warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO is already in the process of reviewing and adapting its strategy to reflect the changed security environment. The communiqué issued following the meeting of its defence planning committee and nuclear planning group in Brussels on 28-29 May looked forward to the approval of a new alliance strategic concept later this year. It also reaffirmed alliance policy of seeking the lowest level of nuclear weapons commensurate with alliance security requirements.

Likewise, the United Kingdom's independent nuclear deterrent has always been the minimum necessary to deter aggression and guarantee our security, and is not based on any numerical correlation with the nuclear arsenals of others. However, if, in time, the United States and Soviet strategic arsenals were further reduced substantially, and if there had been no significant improvements in defensive capabilities, we would consider how best to contribute to the arms control process in the light of the changed circumstances.

Military Exhibitions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to publish the notified list of expected attenders at military equipment and armaments exhibitions.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Royal Institute of International Affairs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of his speech to the Royal Institute of International Affairs on 19 June in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Copies of my right hon. Friend's speech have been placed in the Library.

Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the Defence Export Services Organisation in Kuwait; and what is its planned future role.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our practice to discuss the activities of the Defence Export Services Organisation in particular countries. Its general role will continue to be as set out in my answer to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 19 March, Official Report, column 91.

HOTOL Engine

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the declassification of the details of the horizontal take-off and landing launcher engine.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the reason for the declassification of the design of engines of the horizontal take-off and landing space plane.

Mr. Alan Clark: When the order prohibiting publication of the relevant patent applications was last reviewed, it was considered that technological advances had reduced the sensitivity of the detailed specifications sufficiently to allow them to be released.

Aberporth Firing Range

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1987 Aberporth firing range has been used for test firings of missiles intended for use in the Chilean project RAYO.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Aberporth range is operated by the Defence Research Agency and questions concerning its day-to-day usage fall to the chief executive under the terms of his framework document. I have, therefore, asked him to reply.

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 147, when he expects to receive the report of the preliminary inspection of Samarra for chemical weapons under Security Council resolution 667.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The full inspection reports of the United Nations special commission under United Nations Security Council resolution 687 are confidential to the special commission. The special commission does, however, release information as and when appropriate and a detailed press release on the preliminary inspection of Samarra was issued on 24 June 1991. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Submarines (Clyde)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions he has reached in his consideration of extending the Clyde reporting scheme for submarines to other coastal waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 24 June at column 402 of the Official Report.

Service Personnel

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to make arrangements for service men and women to take out insurance cover against the risk of injury when on exercise.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is a matter for individual service personnel to decide what levels of private insurance for death and injury they wish to obtain in the light of their own financial circumstances. The services have, however, negotiated with the private insurance sector a number of special arrangements to provide cover at favourable rates of premium. In addition, there are a number of charitable funds to which service personnel may subscribe, which make one-time payments to widows or other dependants on the death of a subscriber. We continue to investigate ways of improving the availability of insurance arrangements to ensure that service personnel can obtain appropriate levels of cover.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities of his Department for ensuring that service men and women injured on exercise are eligible for compensation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, all service personnel are eligible for common law compensation for any injury sustained while on duty, or on Crown property, if that injury results from negligence on the part of the Ministry of Defence, its servants or agents.

Any payment of common law compensation would be in addition to the benefits available under the war pension and armed forces pension schemes for an injury which is attributable to service.

Operation Granby

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the joint commander will present a dispatch on Operation Granby.

Mr. Tom King: Air Chief Marshall Sir Patrick Hine's dispatch on Operation Granby will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office as a supplement to The London Gazette on 29 June 1991. The Gulf honours list will be announced on the same day.

East Birmingham Task Force

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what visits or other official engagements were undertaken by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science during his visit to the East Birmingham task force area on 30 January.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The programme included a visit to Hodge Hill girls school, to open the access centre, and a meeting with the Birmingham city action team to discuss the CAT action plan for 1991-92. The afternoon was spent at Coventry polytechnic.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what reasons were given for terminating contracts of employment belonging to home helps in each of the last six months in the Down and Lisburn unit of management;

(2) how many home helps employed by the Down and Lisburn unit of management had had their contracts terminated in each of the last six months.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many home helps are currently employed in the Banbridge and Newry and Mourne units of management.

Mr. Hanley: I am advised by the chairman of the Eastern health and social services board that the number of home helps working in the Craigavon/Banbridge community and Newry and Mourne units of management at 31 March 1991 was:

Fishery Law

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now produce a consolidation of fishery law in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The Government would like to consolidate this legislation. However, the volume of Northern Ireland legislation which is currently being drafted, and which must be accorded priority, is such that no firm timetable for a consolidation of fisheries legislation can be set at this stage.

Police Authority

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made for the appointment of a new police authority for Northern Ireland following the expiry of the term of office of the previous authority on 28 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have today appointed a new Police Authority for Northern Ireland for a term of three years from 29 June 1991. In making the appointments I have, as required by statute, consulted those organisations and persons who are representative of the community in Northern Ireland. I welcome the positive approach that was made by almost all those consulted. As a result, the membership widely represents the whole community and includes representatives from the local councils, voluntary organisations, agriculture, industry and commerce.

The Police Authority has a vital task to perform in maintaining an adequate and efficient police force. It also has a very important role in enhancing the relationship between the police and the public it serves and I am confident that the new authority will continue the excellent work carried out by the outgoing authority, some of whose members are being reappointed.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Services, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons why the spread of parks, woods, sports grounds and undeveloped land in the borough of Greenwich, through the ward weighted density calculation, leads to reduced other services standard spending assessment.

Mr. Key: Ward weighted density is one of the indicators used to calculated the all other services element of standard spending assessments (SSAs). It is based on the number of persons per hectare in each ward in an authority, using information from the 1981 Census; and on the overall population change for that authority between 1981 and the most recent available estimate of population produced by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. A full definition of the indicator is provided in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) which is in the Library. Any change in the area of Greenwich's parks and woods since 1981 will only have affected its score for this indicator and hence its SSA if this resulted in a change in the borough's resident population.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the main services within other services part of standard spending assessment; what are the elements determining the allocation; and what are the characteristics of Greenwich in the all ages social index that lead to the per resident allocation being half the Lewisham figure and one-third the Wandsworth figure.

Mr. Key: A list of the main services covered by the all other services element of standard spending assessments and details of the elements determining its allocation are included in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England). Information on the five factors which comprise the all ages social index is given in the Standard Spending Assessment Handbook 1991-92. Both documents are in the Library.

Children

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham the comparable rates of children in care, and perinatal and infant mortality, and other identifiable outcomes which are associated with or predicted by the elements of the social index used for social services allocations for children.

Mr. Key: The most recent available information on the proportion of children in care, the perinatal and the infant mortality rates for Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham are shown in the table below. The Children's Social Index is one of the indicators used to calculate the children's social services standard spending assessment. By itself, it is not used to predict any outcomes. Both the perinatal and infant mortality rates are based on a very small number of cases.

Table showing the proportion of children in care, perinatal and infant mortality rates for Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham

	Authority
	Greenwich	Wandsworth	Lewisham
Children in care as a proportion of all resident children—latest data (year shown in brackets)	6·94 (1990)	8·05 (1990)	11·10 (1985)
Perinatal mortality rate[1] 1990	7·1	7·2	9·7
Infant mortality rate [1] 1990	8·2	7·8	7·3

[1] Rate per 1,000 live births.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham (a) the numbers of children under five and under 18 years, (b) the SSA for social services-children, per child and (c) the social index element per child and the factors and the dates of base figures within the social index.

Mr. Key: The following table shows for each of the three specified authorities the number of resident children aged under 18 years and under five years of age at 30 June 1989; the amount of Children's Social Services SSA per child aged under 18 years for 1991-92 and the amount distributed on the basis of the Social Index element; and the factor values which constitute the present Children's Social Index. These factors are based on information collected by the 1981 Census.

Authority	Children aged under five years	Children aged under 18 years	SSA per child
			Total (£)	Social index only (£)
Greenwich	15,899	51,746	272	36
Wandsworth	16,776	52,326	514	204
Lewisham	16,566	52,352	437	144

Authority	Factor (i)	Factor (ii)	Factor (iii)	Factor (iv)	Factor (v)
Greenwich	0·1773	0·0004	0·0106	0·1174	53·7411
Wandsworth	0·2434	0·0051	0·0555	0·2928	82·7945
Lewisham	0·2273	0·0059	0·0307	0·2357	66·0626

A detailed description of each of the five factors is given in section 2, annex A of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) which is in the Library.

Footpaths

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has reached a conclusion on the deletion from the definitive map of footpath number 66, Parish of North Meols on appeal by Mr. and Mrs. Baybutt of The Coppins, Hundred End lane, Hesketh Bank, near Preston, against the decision by Lancashire county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No.

The exchange of representations between the parties in this appeal is still underway. My right hon. Friend cannot take a decision until those exchanges are complete and he has had an opportunity to consider all the information put to him.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was raised by local authorities in England in 1990-91 using their discretionary powers to raise £5 per head of adult population, in areas where there is a single tier of principal local authority, and £2·50 per head of adult population, in areas where there are two administrative tiers; and if he has made any assumptions for the likely yield under this power for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: Information on the expenditure incurred under the provisions of section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 (as amended by section 36 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989) in respect of 1990-91 is not available. I have made no assumptions about the likely expenditure in respect of 1991-92.

Rain Forests

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to the report by the House of Commons Environment Committee on the climatological and environment effects of rain forest destruction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have today laid before the House the Government's response to this report. I welcome the conclusions of the Committee's constructive report, which endorse the Government's approach to helping developing countries conserve their tropical forests. The report makes a well-informed contribution to the debate on rainforest protection. The Government, in line with the Committee's recommendations, are working with the Governments and peoples of the tropical countries in their efforts to conserve the forests and we are implementing a major increase in assistance to the forest sector in the developing countries.

EC Environment and Transport Policies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received since 1987 from Earth Resources Research (London) on environmental and transport policy developments in the European Community.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 27 June 1991]: Earth Resources Research (London) has produced a number of reports on behalf of environmental organisations. I am not aware of the department's having received representations from them on European Community matters.

TRANSPORT

Driving Standards Agency

Sir Alan Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the financial and service targets that he has set for the Driving Standards Agency for the current financial year.

Mr. Chope: I have today placed copies of the Driving Standards Agency's business plan for 1991 in the House Library. The plan sets a demanding target of £20·89 for the 'L' test unit cost and a reduction in the average waiting time for 'L' tests from eight to six weeks.

Airport Capacity

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what passenger air traffic he expects for the south-east in the late 1990s; and when he proposes to announce increased airport capacity in the south-east to meet it.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's air traffic forecasts distinguish between London and regional airports, and are predicted for five-yearly intervals. Passenger demand at the London airports in 2000 is currently forecast to be in the range 88·7-117·6 million. It is for airport operators to bring forward proposals for new capacity. BAA plc holds outline planning permission for the development of Stansted to handle 15 million passengers per year, although expansion beyond the 8 mppa capacity of its first phase will require Parliament's agreement to the relaxation of the present limit on aircraft movements at the airport. No decision has been taken on the timing of an approach to Parliament.

Thurleigh Airfield

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the recent Civil Aviation Authority report, he will give an assurance that the airfield at Thurleigh will not be required as a passenger terminal.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the light of the Civil Aviation Authority's advice last year on the air traffic control and air space implications of developing additional capacity at various airports in and near the south-east, to meet demand for air travel in the longer term, Thurleigh is not one of those being considered further by the working group we have established for the purpose. I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made on 9 May by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement, that on a preliminary assessment Thurleigh could have potential as a commercial non-passenger airfield.

Disabled Rail Travellers

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that British Rail provides toilets, easy access, hand rails and greater space for disabled travellers on the new 323 train.

Mr. McLoughlin: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 June.

DVLA (Medical Reports)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency to allow individuals access to medical reports which it obtains on them on the same terms as apply under the Access to Medical Records Act 1988 to reports obtained for employment or insurance purposes.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Monday 24 June 1991]: Medical reports provided to the medical advisers at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency are provided on a strictly doctor to doctor basis, under provisions in the Road Traffic Act 1988, for the sole purpose of determining fitness to hold a driving licence. Although there is no legal requirement I have asked the DVLA to consider the operational and privacy implications of releasing medical reports and I shall write further to the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Shellfish

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has had from shellfish fishermen about the import of Canadian lobster;

(2) what assessment he has made of whether Canadian lobsters are being dumped on the United Kingdom market.

Mr. Curry: I and my officials have received several representations about the import of Canadian lobster, including the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and the Shellfish Association of Great Britain.

Although imports of Canadian lobsters has increased, there is no evidence of dumping. However, my officials have asked the European Commission to look into the problem, and we shall continue to monitor developments.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure the United Kingdom shellfish industry is not undermined by Government subsidised competition from other countries.

Mr. Curry: I am not aware that the United Kingdom shellfish industry is being undermined in this way, but if my hon. Friend has specific evidence I will be happy to investigate further.

Farmers

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what total sum of money would be involved if the maximum sums permitted by EC regulations were paid to farmers and others qualified to receive them.

Mr. Curry: The total additional cost of making all payments under EC schemes at the maximum permitted rates cannot be assessed precisely.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the payments of any description which are being made to farmers, and those who qualify, at less than the maximum permitted by EC regulations.

Mr. Curry: The following payments under EC agricultural schemes are not being made at the maximum rates permitted in the relevant EC regulation:

- Set-aside
- Suckler cow premium (outside the less favoured areas only)
- Hill livestock compensatory allowances (HLCAs)
- Grants under the farm and conservation grant scheme for:
  - Supply and installation of:
    - (i) energy saving facilities;
    - (ii) thermal insulation, vapour or gas sealing (excluding glasshouses)
  - Fences
  - Walls not constructed of traditional materials
  - Flood protection
  - Replacement drainage
  - Reseeding and regeneration of gressland
  - Preparation of improvement plans

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Action

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a detailed description of Employment Action, including how, apart from remuneration, it will differ from the old community programme; and what work it will undertake.

Mr. Jackson: Employment Action is a significant new initiative which will offer unemployed people the chance to keep their skills up to date by work experience on projects of value to the local community. It will provide work experience for 60,000 unemployed people in a full year. It will be targeted on people who have been unemployed for six months or more, including particularly those living in our inner cities.

Employment Action will differ from the community programme in three very significant ways. Firstly, help for individuals in finding jobs will be an integral part of the programme. Secondly, the opportunities it provides will be full-time. Thirdly, TECs and local enterprise companies in Scotland, will take the lead in organising the programme locally and in determining which projects of genuine local benefit will be supported.

The exact nature of the work carried out under Employment Action will be decided by the TECs and local enterprise companies with regard to the needs of the local community and of unemployed people.

Race Relations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set up a special discrimination section within the industrial tribunal system in respect of cases involving race relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans to do so. Industrial tribunals hearing cases of racial discrimination have a special race member with knowledge or experience of relations between persons of different racial groups in the employment field and this system is working satisfactorily.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to make ethnic record-keeping and monitoring obligatory by employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government fully support the practice of ethnic monitoring in employment but believes that the voluntary approach is the best way forward in this area. Ethnic monitoring makes good business sense by helping employers to assess whether their personnel practices and procedures are providing equality of opportunity for all, irrespective of race.

The Commission for Racial Equality's code of practice on employment which recommends ethnic monitoring by employers recognises that the need for detailed information, and the methods of collecting it, will vary according to the circumstances of individual establishments. It must therefore be for individual employers to adopt the method of monitoring that is best suited to their needs and circumstances.

Management Charter Initiative

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have subscribed publicly to the principles expressed in the management charter initiative since the publication of the Government's White Paper "Employment for the 1990s"; and if he will list them.

Mr. Jackson: As at 25 June 1991, 943 employers had joined the management charter initiative, pledging commitment to its principles as expressed in the code of practice published in May 1989. A copy of the most current membership list will be lodged in the Library of the House.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many industry lead bodies there are; and if he will list them, stating how many staff each of them have.

Mr. Jackson: There are currently 157 industry lead bodies. A number of them are consortia. A listing of all organisations acting as industry lead bodies is contained in the regularly updated publication, the Standards Digest. A copy of the most recent edition has been placed in the House of Commons Library. It is not possible to state how many staff work on lead body activities as the majority of these bodies are also industry training organisations.

Footwear and Textiles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the footwear and textile industries for each month since February.

Mr. Jackson: The number of employees in employment in the footwear and textile industries in Great Britain were as follows:

Unadjusted for seasonal variations

HOME DEPARTMENT

EC Convention on Frontiers

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between the member states of the European Community in respect of the draft convention on the crossing of external frontiers.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The scope and content of this draft convention, together with progess to date, were outlined in the answer that I gave on 20 June at columns 242-43 to a previous question by my hon. Friend following the meeting of EC Ministers concerned with immigration on 13-14 June. The draft convention, and the declarations to be attached to it, were further discussed at a special meeting of EC Ministers which I attended on 26 June. Agreement was reached on the substance; but the Spanish Government declined to agree to the provision which the draft Convention makes in respect of Gibraltar. I will inform my hon. Friend and the House of further developments as they occur.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he plans to increase the use of detention for asylum seekers;

(2) if he plans to decrease the proportion of asylum seekers held in prisons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Persons (including asylum seekers) who are liable to be detained under powers given in the Immigration Act 1971 are detained only if they cannot be relied on to comply with the terms of temporary admission or release. There are no present plans to change this policy. Detention may be in immigration service accommodation or in prisons, depending upon the degree of security required and the availability of places.

Prison Discharge Grant

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to increase the prison discharge grant to the equivalent of two weeks' payment.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are considering the representations which have been made to us about this matter.

Crime Prevention Week

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his evaluation of the effect on the crime rate of Crime Prevention Week.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office research shows that the following were some of the new initiatives which were set up as a result of the week: 37 crime prevention panels, 73 neighbourhood watch schemes, 300 vehicle watch schemes and 54 other watch schemes. Moreover, business and media support for the week was worth over £11 million. In addition, 1·5 million copies of the crime prevention handbook were distributed. Taken together, we believe these activities and the many others that took place during the week, will have encourged the public to help to prevent crime, particularly crimes involving property, and that increased public participation in crime prevention can lead to a reduction in crime.

Violence against Women

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress towards implementing the recommendations of the Women's National Commission report on violence against women.

Mr. John Patten: I will reply as soon as possible.

HEALTH

Pensions

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the date on which the announcement was made of an error in the calculation of the retail prices index which led to an underpayment of public service pensions; and what was the total amount due to national health service pensioners as a result of the error at that date;

(2) if he will give the (a) date on which the National Health Service Pensioners Trust was established; (b) the date on which the National Health Service Pensioners Trust deed was approved by the Charity Commissioners; (c) the amount of money which has currently been paid to the trust with approval of his Department; and (d) the date of those payments;

(3) if the amount vested in the National Health Service Pensioners Trust was calculated at 1987 prices or current cash prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The announcement of an error in calculating the retail prices index between February 1986 and October 1987 was made on 11 December 1987 at column 283 by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Employment and on 18 December 1987 at columns 1376-84 by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People. The underpayment on all retirement pensions and long-term benefits at that date was estimated at £109 million. The amount attributable to national health service pensioners was subsequently estimated as £1·13 million (England and Wales) and £180,000 (Scotland). This was based on an estimate of the expenditure on national health service pensions in the years when the underpayments occurred. From April 1989 all pensions were adjusted to make good the effect of the error.

On 3 May 1988 at column 400 my right hon. Friend the then Paymaster General announced to the House how public service pensioners would be able to benefit through a donation to public service charities. Following a feasibility study on how best to provide for national health service pensioners, the Charity Commissioners approved the trust deed for the National Health Service Pensioners' Trust on 26 November 1990. The trust was established on 4 January 1991 and a payment of £1·311 million was made to the Trust on 28 March 1991.

Employment

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to improve the recruitment and retention of women in the national health service and to enable them to fulfil their potential in a changing labour market.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are already many initiatives under way in the NHS. These include career breaks, flexible working arrangements, job sharing, flexi-hours, holiday play schemes and more flexible approaches to training.

A seminar "Women in the NHS: Opening Minds Opening Doors" was held on Tuesday 25 June. This brought together representatives from health authorities and NHS trusts. It concluded very positively in the preparation of regional action plans to be implemented over the coming year. Earlier this year I invited regional chairmen to nominate a non-executive director in their region to take forward this work. Three regional conferences will be held in the autumn to build on this progress plus another national event next year. In the meantime, we are preparing a document to promote best practice in this field.

All these steps will provide a spur to bring employment practices for women throughout the NHS up to the very high standards which we are working to attain.

Form E111

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has received from the French authorities to his reminder about the unlimited validity of forms E111 issued in the United Kingdom to holders ordinarily resident here.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that, despite two reminders, the French authorities have not so far responded. I am asking the British Embassy in Paris to assist in bringing this matter to a conclusion and I shall ensure that my right hon. Friend is kept informed.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what extra costs are envisaged for the employment of management staff and techniques in fund-holding general practices; and whether these will be met by extra payment;

(2) what financial arrangements are being made to ease the transition of fund-holding general practices towards greater managerial responsibility.

Mr. Dorrell: In recognition of their additional management responsibilities fund holders are eligible to claim up to £33,000 assistance with the relevant costs. An allowance of £16,500 is payable for this purpose in the preparatory year.

Operation Waiting Lists

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had been waiting for more than a year for an operation in East Birmingham district on (a) 30 September 1989 and (b) 30 June 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There were 456 people waiting over a year for in-patient operations in East Birmingham district at 30 September 1989 and 268 at 30 June 1990.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to bring forward a consultative document on equalisation of the state pension age.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State on 26 June at column 997-1006.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his latest estimate is of the number of pensioners who both pay income tax and receive housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of those aged 60 or over in Great Britain who pay income tax and recieve housing benefit is estimated to be 110,000 during 1991-92.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986, 1987 and 1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Note: Married and unmarried couples count as one unit.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the number of pensioners who received housing benefit and paid income tax if the income tax age allowances were increased by (a) £500 and (b) £1,000 at current benefit levels.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of those aged 60 or over in Great Britain who would receive housing benefit and pay income tax in 1991-92 if the income tax age allowances were increased is estimated as follows:

Income tax allowance increased by	500—80,000
Income tax allowance increased by	1,000—70,000

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986, 1987 and 1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Note: Married and unmarried couples count as one unit.

Payment Delays

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants are still waiting to receive their April increase in benefits; and if he will also supply totals for each standard region.

Miss Widdecombe: The uprating exercise for all social security benefits has been completed. There will be individual cases where for various reasons it has not been possible to pay the April increase, but information on these cases is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were considered by social fund inspectors during January, February, March, April and May.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is shown in the table.

	Number
January 1991	817
February 1991	748
March 1991	755
April 1991	760
May 1991	915

Benefit Regulations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has now received an opinion from the Social Security Advisory Committee concerning his Department's proposal to abrogate regulation 72 of the Social Security Benefit (Adjudication) Regulations 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I can confirm that the Social Security Advisory Committee has submitted its report on the proposal to amend regulation 72. We are carefully considering the contents of that report before proceeding further.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Parliamentary Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the Top Salaries Review Body report on parliamentary pensions is to be published; when the Government Actuary's valuation report on the parliamentary contributory pension fund will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: In my letter of 4 February to the chairman of the Top Salaries Review Body, I invited the TSRB to review a number of aspects of the parliamentary pension scheme, including the balance between the Exchequer and Member contributions, the role of the Government Actuary and the rate of accrual. The TSRB has in consequence conducted a wide ranging review of the financing of the scheme. Its report has been published today and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available in the Vote Office. I would like to thank the review body most warmly for the speed and thoroughness with which they have produced their report.

The TSRB have recommended that

(a) there should not be a switch to a fixed ratio between the Exchequer and Member contributions to the parliamentary contributory pension fund and the balance of cost method should be retained for determining the level of the Exchequer contribution;

(b) the Government Actuary should continue to be responsible for reviewing the financial position of the fund every three years and, as provided in the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Act 1987, for recommending the balance of cost contribution required from the Exchequer;

(c) because there is at present no adequate system for reviewing the parliamentary pension scheme and the Trustees' role is essentially fiduciary, the TSRB should review the pension scheme on a regular basis at the time of the Government Actuary's triennial valuations;

(d) in line with their finding that only 4 per cent. of occupational pension schemes have an employee contribution in excess of 7 per cent., which demonstrates that the Members' contribution has been seriously out of line with practice elsewhere in the public and private sectors, the Members' contribution rate should be reduced from the existing rate of 9 per cent. to 6 per cent. of salary;

(e) the accrual rate introduced in 1983 should remain at a fiftieth of final salary for each year of service;

(f) this accrual rate of fiftieths should be applied to all —ie including pre-1983—service for currently sitting MPs in respect of their future pension entitlement, with appropriate augmentation for those who have been making up the shortfall voluntarily;

(g) pensions for surviving spouses should not be improved further from the present level of five-eighths of the Member's pension;

(h) the existing complex enhancement rules should be replaced by the grant of full years of potential pensionable employment to age 65 for the calculation of ill-health retirement pensions and of spouses' pensions when MPs die in service;

(i) in respect of former MPs who die during the first five years of retirement, a Member's pension should continue to be paid to the surviving spouse for the remainder of the five years after retirement, followed thereafter by the dependant's entitlement;

(j) these changes should apply also to the supplementary scheme for Ministers and other paid office holders.

The Government propose to accept all these recommendations except the backdating of the faster rate of accrual introduced in 1983—recommendation (f). Given that Members have already had an opportunity to purchase added years at the higher rate of accrual—and that many Members have taken this opportunity—we do not believe that a retrospective change of this kind is justified.

The Government Actuary's valuation report on the parliamentary contribution pension fund is today being laid before the House, in accordance with section 3 of the Parliamentary and other Pensions Act 1987.

The valuation (as at April 1990) estimates that the long run total cost of the scheme—leaving aside surpluses and deficits—is 23 per cent. of salary. This compares with the valuation at April 1987 when the total cost of the scheme was estimated at 20 per cent. The higher total cost of the scheme reflects the substantial benefit improvements—principally the increased widows' pension—made by Regulations laid in March.

Under existing legislation, the Exchequer contribution is determined by the balance of cost after taking account of the Member contribution. As I have explained, the TSRB have recommended, and the Government accept, that this system should continue unchanged. Accordingly, if the Member contribution remained at its present level of 9 per cent., the Exchequer contribution following the latest valuation would be 14 per cent., as against 11 per cent. at present. But as the House is aware, the actual Exchequer contribution since April 1989 has been lower, because the previous valuation (as at April 1989) showed a surplus in the Fund: as a result the actual contribution paid by the Exchequer since April 1989 has been 4·4 per cent.

There continues to be a surplus in the fund and the Actuary has therefore recommended that the actual Exchequer contribution should fall to 2·8 per cent. until 2000, when it would need to rise to the long run standard rate of 14 per cent. Under the 1987 Act, this recommendation would not come into effect until April 1992. However the TSRB's recommendations, which the Government propose to accept, will significantly alter the position.

The Government propose that the reduction in the Member contribution from 9 per cent. to 6 per cent. should also take effect from next April: this correspondingly increases the Exchequer contribution by 3 per cent. The recommended improvements in the death and ill-health benefits, which we also propose to accept, will increase the long run total cost of the scheme by 1 per cent., to 24 per cent. of salary. Since these improvements are being accepted by the Government without changing the Member contribution, the Exchequer contribution will also rise by a further 1 per cent. As a result, the long term cost payable by the Exchequer—leaving aside surpluses or deficits—will be 18 per cent., against a Member contribution of 6 per cent., and the actual Exchequer contribution, taking the present surplus into account, will be 6·8 per cent.

As required by section 2 of the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Act 1987, I will be consulting about these changes with the Trustees of the scheme and other interested parties. I then intend to allow the House to debate both the GAD and TSRB reports before the summer recess.

Ice Cream

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Lord President of the Council why supplies of Loseley ice cream for the Members Dining Room have been cancelled in favour of another product; and if he will resume orders for Loseley ice cream forthwith.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 26 June 1991]: I understand that the Assistant Manager of the Refreshment Department wrote to the right hon. Member on this matter on 21 June. Loseley ice cream is still being supplied.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when counsel for the Inland Revenue conceded in court in the Woolwich case that there had been double or additional taxation.

Mr. Maples: Counsel for the Inland Revenue did not concede in the Woolwich case that there had been double or additional taxation.

Sterling M3

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the annualised rate of growth of sterling M3 for the eight months from mid-June 1979 to mid-April 1980, and for each subsequent financial year from 1980-81.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Sterling M3 is no longer published. For M4, the nearest current measure of money stock, the information requested is shown in the table:

Labour Party Policy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of civil service staff hours which have been spent producing information used in the production of the document on Labour's public expenditure plans, published on 20 June, and the total cost to the Exchequer thereof.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the total cost, (b) the total number of man hours and (c) the number of officials in each grade involved in the costings of Labour party proposals included in the letter from the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, which was deposited in the Library on 20 June.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 27 June 1991]: It is not the normal practice to give details of the time spent by civil servants in carrying out particular tasks for Ministers. This work was undertaken in accordance with guidelines on the role of officials in costing Opposition policies drawn up by the head of the home civil service and published in the Fifth Report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee for the 1989-90 session.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Piracy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help and assistance his Department has given to merchant shipping to counter the problem of piracy at sea.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We recognise the importance of combating piracy. Together with other countries the United Kingdom participated in a recent meeting sponsored by the International Maritime Organisation which discussed piracy. We will play a full part in further deliberations in the International Maritime Organisation in October.

Oleg Tsarev

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider the non-granting of a visa to Oleg Tsarev to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Expo 92

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer on 24 June, Official Report, column 351, whether any Gibraltarian expertise is being provided or whether any exhibit will come from Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The detailed content of exhibits for the British pavilion has yet to be decided, but any exhibit will need to fit in with the overall exhibition theme.

SCOTLAND

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of employment training placements in 1990-91 were in workplaces with employers; and what percentage were in project-based schemes.

Mr. Alan Stewart: The information requested is set out on the table.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has on the level of employer contributions to the finance of ET schemes since ET started.

Mr. Allan Stewart: We do not have any evidence. Employer contributions are a matter for negotiation between training providers and employers providing placements.

Offenders

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest available figures for the total number and percentage of convicted offenders broken down by (a) sex, (b) age and (c) type of offence; and what are the average and median ages for known offenders in terms of (i) males and (ii) females, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is given in the table. Statistics are only held in relation to the number of sentenced prisoner receptions over the period in question and on whether a prisoner has previous convictions rather than how many.

Employment Laws

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Lord Advocate has issued any guidance in the last 10 years to procurators fiscal in respect of prosecutions under the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920 and part III of the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1937 as amended and associated local byelaws; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has not issued any guidance in the last 10 years to procurators fiscal in respect of contraventions of the Acts or byelaws specified. Any reports received by procurators fiscal alleging such contraventions are considered according to the individual circumstances of each case.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) prosecutions have been brought and (b) convictions obtained in respect of alleged offences under (i) the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920, (ii) part III of the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1937 as amended and (iii) local byelaws made under section 28 of the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act 1937, in each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not separately identifiable in the Scottish Office classification of crimes and offences.

Criminal Justice

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of persons convicted for offences in relation to the provisions of the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1880 or the Civil Imprisonment (Scotland) Act 1882 in each of the past 20 years in terms of (a) type of offence, (b) sex of convicted miscreant and (c) type of sentence imposed by the court; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information in the form requested is not available, but the prison population of civil prisoners averaged 1 in the years 1985 to 19879, while the average number of receptions of such prisoners over this period was 15. These figures relate to all types of civil imprisonment.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest available figures and percentages for people sentenced by the courts for indictable offences broken down by (a) sex and (b) age.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The tables give information on all persons who were proceeded against on indictment and who had a charge proved against them in 1989. It is not possible to provide information on persons who had a charge proved under summary procedure whose cases could have been heard on indictment.

Sheriff Ewen Stewart

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had about the conduct of Sheriff Ewen Stewart; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Following representations, including representations from Members of this House, and in the light of the observations of Sheriff Principal R. A. Bennett QC in a recent case, I have concluded that it would be appropriate for an investigation to be undertaken of the fitness for office of Sheriff Ewen Stewart. I have therefore asked the Lord President and Lord Justice Clerk to carry out such an investigation under the provisions of section 12 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1971.

Foreign Languages

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to strengthen support for foreign language study in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government attach great importance to the study of modern foreign languages within the school curriculum and beyond. Guidance is that all secondary pupils should pursue the study of a modern European foreign language throughout the four years of compulsory secondary education and that increasing numbers should continue their study beyond that. At the same time pilot studies are being undertaken on the teaching of modern languages in the primary school. Employers are increasingly aware of the need for language training to ensure that their staff have the requisite capabilities to trade successfully within the single European market.

To support schools and others in the substantial demands made on them by these developments the Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research (CILT) and the university of Stirling, with the support of the Scottish Office Education Department, are to establish a Scottish Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research.

The centre will be based in the university of Stirling and will commence operations in December this year. Its work will be evaluated after three years. The centre will provide support and material for language teachers in their work and will also aim to supply information and advice to firms about language policy, recruitment and training. The centre will draw on the experience and resources of CILT built up over many years and will also benefit from Stirling University's particular facilities for modern language provision and associated pre-service teacher training.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government will respond to the Report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology on innovation in manufacturing industry—1st report, 1990-91, HL Paper 18-1.

Mr. Lilley: Yesterday the Government published their reply, "Innovation in Manufacturing Industry: Government Response to the First Report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, 1990-91 Session." Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Steel

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the output of the steel industries of each EC member state in 1980 and in 1990.

Mr. Leigh: The information requested is shown in the table. Output is given in terms of crude steel production; this is the basic output measure for which EC-wide statistics are available.

Crude steel production in current EC countries, 1980 and 1990
(million tonnes)

	1980	1990
Germany	43·8	41·8
Italy	26·5	25·5
France	23·2	19·0
United Kingdom	11·3	17·9
Spain	12·6	12·7
Belgium	12·3	11·5
Netherlands	5·3	5·4
Luxembourg	4·6	3·6
Greece	0·9	1·0
Portugal	0·7	0·7
Denmark	0·7	0·6
Ireland	0·0	0·3

	1980	1990
Total	141·9	140·0

[1]1980 was an exceptional year for crude steel production in the United Kingdom because of strike action. Production in 1979 was 21·5 million tonnes and in 1981 was 15·3 million.

Timeshares

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has received about misleading advertising techniques practised by promoters selling timeshares; whether he has any evidence that such complaints are increasing in number; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I receive a steady stream of complaints about the marketing practices of some timeshare companies and associated high pressure selling. There has been an increase over the last month but this may reflect publicity given to these practices in a recent television programme.

I have already told the House that we intend to amend the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 to tighten the controls on statements about services and to bring timeshare award schemes within the Act's powers.

European Community

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of "European Economy December 1990", published by the European Commission.

Mr. Sainsbury: A copy of the publication is already held by the Library.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the single market laws have been implemented by each EEC member to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the response that I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 25 June at columns 438-40, which gives the full implementation records of all member states.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the proposals not yet adopted necessary for the completion of the single market.

Mr. Sainsbury: Annex 2 of the Commission's reports to the Council and the European Parliament give the proposals submitted by the Commission which still require Council adoption. These reports are deposited in the House Library when my Department receives them from the Commission. A copy of the fifth report is already held. A copy of the sixth report is expected shortly.

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the single market laws each EC country has refused to implement; and which countries have been brought before the European Court of Justice by the European Commission for persistently refusing to implement the single market laws.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 25 June at columns 438-40.

Our understanding is that it is not a question of member states refusing to implement single market measures, but of legislative and administrative delays.

The Commission's latest report on the completion of the internal market notes that implementation of court judgments has itself considerably improved; 26 judgments by the court are currently the subject of actions brought for failure to act. These failures to act involve only four member states: Greece (3), Germany (4), Belgium (4) and Italy (15). It should be noted that these cases include measures which fall into the general single market area, but go considerably wider than the White Paper programme, on which the figures for implementation provided on 25 June are based.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the departmental on-line data base Spearhead, in providing public and commercial information on the European single market; how many users have accessed the data base in each month since it was established; and at what cost to his Department and the consumer of the service Spearhead is operated.

Mr. Sainsbury: [holding answer 27 June 1991]: My Department's Spearhead detabase provides comprehensive information on current and prospective EC legislation affecting business. It provides a brief synopsis of measures which have been adopted (and where appropriate how they have been implemented in this country), proposals currently under discussion in Brussels, and others which the Commission intend to submit. A Government contact point is given for each measure who can provide more detailed advice.

In addition Spearhead provides information on shared-cost EC research and development programmes and gives details of draft national legislation proposed in other member states and EFTA countries notified to the European Commission under the procedure laid down in Directive 83/189/EEC.

Spearhead is published commercially through private sector data providers. The Department provides the information free of charge to the hosts. However, in return the Exchequer receives royalties based on actual usage by customers. It was originally launched in April 1988 exclusively on Profile Information (now FT Profile). The database is now also hosted on the Justis on-line service provided by Context Limited and by Data-Star. All subscribers to these services can access the database directly. It is also available through a range of distributors (including Telecom Gold) who offer gateways to these hosts. Because hosts bill distributors as if they were a single customer the actual number of users who have accessed the database each month is not available. My officials therefore monitor the performance indirectly through the royalties received from the hosts which is related to the use made of the database.

The table gives combined royalty payments received on a half yearly basis since Spearhead was launched.

The costs to consumers of accessing the Spearhead database are the standard charges for accessing the various data files carried by the individual hosts. This is approximately £1·80 per minute plus VAT. Distributors set their own pricing arrangements. The estimated marginal cost to my Department of making this service available to business (excluding royalties) is some £10,000 per annum.

Period	Royalties (£ thousand)
April to June 1988	1
July to December 1988	1
January to June 1989	9·5
July to December 1989	6·9
January to June 1990	5·7
July to December 1990	5·6
January to May 1991	5·0

[1] For the first eight months the Department waived royalty payments as part of the launch campaign. Had they not have been waived royalties would have been some £8 thousand.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent on the enterprise initiative since its inception, broken down into (a) administration, (b) publicity, (c) grants to business and (i) by region and (ii) in total.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 June 1991]: Total expenditure on the consultancy initiatives in the period from launch of the initiatives in January 1988 up to the end of March 1991 was £171·2 million, of which £43·2 million was on administration, including enterprise counsellor and scheme contractor activities, £36·2 million on publicity and £91·8 million on consultancy and support for businesses. A breakdown of expenditure on consultancy support for businesses for each DTI region and for Scotland and Wales is as follows. It is not possible to give a breakdown by region of expenditure on administration and publicity.

D.T.I. Expenditure on assisted consultancies January 1988—March 1991

Bass, Preston Brook

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the regional and job creation grants and incentives given to Bass at Preston Brook; and what were the numbers of jobs expected to be created.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 June 1991]: All applications for assistance by companies from my Department are treated in strictest confidence. However, Preston Brook is not in an assisted area and no companies there can qualify for DTI regional assistance.

Overseas Trade Fairs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there is any difference in policy in awarding grants, travel and exhibitions to British firms exhibiting at overseas trade fairs between military companies and non-military companies.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 June 1991]: Of the 292 fairs selected for DTI support during 1990-91, only four were specifically military fairs.

The Department of Trade and Industry does not differentiate between civil and military companies when providing assistance at overseas trade fairs.

Environmental Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to meet the United Kingdom Chamber of Commerce to discuss the outcome of the meeting co-ordinated by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on environmental education in business schools, universities and polytechnics, held on 22 May.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 June 1991]: My Department has no knowledge of this organisation nor the meeting referred to. However, if the hon. Gentleman can provide further details I shall be glad to consider his question again.

Braille Books

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to allow reproduction of books in Braille without any copyright fee being required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 June 1991]: I understand that many authors and publishers grant Braille reproduction rights free of charge. I do not think it would be appropriate to compel them to do so.

Shipbuilding

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what formula was used to calculate the extent to which Britain would have to reduce shipbuilding capacity in return for levels of state aid authorised to the industry in the agreement between the United Kingdom Government and the European Commission which resulted in the closure of North East Shipbuilders Ltd, Sunderland.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 June 1991]: The level of state aid to British Shipbuilders authorised by the European Commission in December 1988 was not conditional on a particular reduction in United Kingdom merchant shipbuilding capacity calculated by reference to any formula.

In the absence of acceptable bids for the remaining North East Shipbuilders Ltd. shipyards during the eight and a half months in which they had been up for sale, the Government decided in early December 1988 to close the yards. The proposed closure aid at North East Shipbuilders Ltd. to cover such matters as redundancies and the provision of remedial assistance had to be taken into account in determining the overall level of subsidy permissible to British Shipbuilders within the relevant Community shipbuilding aid ceilings. Accordingly these costs were included in the wider package of subsidy measures notified to, and approved by, the European Commission in December 1988.

DEFENCE

Operation Granby

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British personnel died during Operation Granby; and how many of those were killed in action.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Forty-seven British personnel died during Operation Granby. It is now known that 24 of these were killed in action.

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will ask Guardsmen Hicks, Povey and Ray to make a further statement on the events in July 1989 in Suffield, Canada;

(2) if he will now arrange for Guardsmen Povey and Hicks to be interviewed over the accident in July 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no plans at present to interview or take further statements from Guardsmen Hicks, Ray and Povey in connection with the accident at Batus in July 1989.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken by his Department to trace the origin of the munition that exploded in July 1989 in Suffield, Canada, causing the injuries suffered by Guardsmen Hicks, Povey and Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The munition was identified in the report of the board of inquiry into this tragic incident as being of Canadian manufacture.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the proceedings of the board of inquiry into the accident during a training exercise in July 1989 at Suffield, Canada, are classified as restricted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: MOD regulations require the originator of any document to give it security classification appropriate to its contents. The restricted classification of the board of inquiry's report is therefore a result of the judgment of the members of the board exercised at the time.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether guardsmen on the training exercise in July 1989 at Suffield, Canada, were properly briefed on the possibility of unexploded munitions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry into this incident concluded that the men were properly briefed.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of the 25 June to the hon. Member for Walsall, North, Official Report, column 453, if he will state the name and rank of the senior officer in the Grenadier Guards who has made representations to him over Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Major General (Ret'd) B. C. Gordon Lennox CB MBE, the regimental lieutenant-colonel of the Grenadier Guards.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what insurance policies are taken out by his Department on soldiers involved in non-combat or non-anti-terrorist activities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. Service men killed or injured are eligible for benefits under the armed forces pension scheme. Where death or injury is attributable to service they are also eligible for benefits under the Department of Social Security's war pensions scheme. Both these schemes are funded by the Exchequer. The Department has, however, arranged for service men to have access to various commercial insurance policies at advantageous premium rates; participation is a matter for the individuals concerned.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to assure himself that the board of inquiry held in Canada after the accident in July 1989 at Suffield, examined all the relevant facts pertaining to his Department's responsibility for the safety of their employees.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) on 21 June at columns 347-48.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 25 June to the hon. Member for Walsall, North, Official Report, column 453, if he will place in the Library a copy of the transcript of the interview with Lance Corporal Ray at Medicine Hat City hospital, Canada.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The transcript in question forms part of the proceedings of the board of inquiry which investigated the accident at Batus in July 1989. Board of inquiry reports are confidential to the Ministry of Defence, and it is not the Ministry's practice to release them to outside parties.

Holy Loch

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is planned to retain X-berth facilities at Holy Loch following the departure of the United States navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Following the departure of the United States Navy, Holy Loch will be designated as a Z berth, which will allow occasional visits by nuclear-powered warships. This designation will not require any facilities to be retained ashore or afloat at Holy Loch.

Naval Vessels

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's conclusions regarding the capability of Soviet neutron and gamma ray detector equipment to verify the presence of nuclear weapons aboard naval vessles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1989 a Soviet agency conducted experiments with the National Resources Defence Council—a United States non-governmental body—in which it was demonstrated that under favourable circumstances the Soviet Union has the capability to detect some types of nuclear weapons at short range using neutron and gamma ray detection equipment.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any member of the United States Congress's Drell Commission on nuclear warhead safety was provided with facilities or visits to British nuclear weapon system establishments during the course of the Commission's inquiry.

Mr. Alan Clark: We received no requests for such facilities or visits.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information on British nuclear weapon system safety arrangements was provided by his Department to the Drell Commission of the United States Congress; and what security restrictions were applied to any such information.

Mr. Alan Clark: We received no requests to provide such information to the Drell panel.

Submarines (Women Crew)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to opening up afloat postings in the submarine service to women.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: When sea service for women was announced on 5 February 1990 it was made clear that current plans did not include extending mixed manning to the submarine flotilla. The reason for this was not one of principle but simply that conditions in existing RN submarines are such that major problems would be encountered in ensuring a proper degree of privacy for both men and women. Now that sea service for women in surface ships is well established, the feasibility of their serving in submarines in the future is being addressed.

Navy (Training)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide figures showing the level of training activity by naval forces from the Portland naval base in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total number of ships undertaking training	Total ship weeks
1979	61	253
1980	49	181
1981	61	285
1982	87	348
1983	105	363
1984	99	352
1985	99	347
1986	81	294
1987	84	302
1988	74	237
1989	92	332
1990	70	213
[1]1991	52	166

[1] To date.

These figures include the training of foreign warships.

East Timor

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, at his recent meeting with Indonesia's Minister for Research, the question of the use of United Kingdom supplied arms in East Timor was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Such discussions are a confidential matter between Governments.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 193

SESSION 1990–91

17th June—28th June 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
